TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Now that Mr. Harriman has given the weight of his authority to a serious view of competitive railroad building in the West, the subject doubtless will begin to receive the attention it deserves. The signs have been clear enough for some time. They have been pointed out more than once by conservative commentators. Wall Street has preferred to disregard them.

It has been known for some time that the railroad peace of the Northwest was insecure. Messrs. Hill and Harriman have twice hurled the hatchet in the Snake River Valley with much ceremony and form, but those in attendance upon the obsequies have said that the solemnity of the event was marred in each case by the distrust with which the two chief mourners eyed each other over the grave. Both were observed to take accurate and lingering notice of the exact spot of burial. Their friends were at once willing to wager heavily that either could revisit the valley on the darkest night and go directly to the place. It is not surprising, therefore, that the troublesome instrument has twice been disinterred. Messrs. Hill and Harriman both returned to Wall Street yesterday. Mr. Hill's stocks went up and the Harriman stocks declined. Great Northern preferred advanced 2⅜ per cent., and Northern Pacific 3¼ per cent. It is hardly fair, however, to compare the Hill and Harriman stocks in this way. For the Harriman stocks there is a free and highly speculative market, whereas Mr. Hill's stocks are in the peculiar position of having been practically cornered by friendship. No loyal Hill follower dares to sell out. Mr. Hill cons the transfer books of his corporations with an eagle eye, and any dereliction among his supporters would out the offender out of the fold.

The Hill-Morgan following in Wall Street is boastfully bullish and filled with the utmost confidence. It will buy control of Union Pacific in the open market if it dares to do so, or, rather, its leaders say they will, and then the Hill railroads in the Northwest will be earning and paying big dividends when every competing property is bankrupt. This following has made a great deal of money; it also is long of a great many stocks.

The Harriman interview took the professional bull interests of Wall Street by surprise. It came out only a few minutes before the closing, and was accompanied by brisk selling of Union Pacific and Southern Pacific, the weakness of which influenced a lot of general selling in the last five minutes.

The news yesterday was all on the bear side, but the market made a show of disregarding it. In the late trading on Thursday the arbitrage people sold stocks rather freely, expecting to be able to cover them lower on the other side, and they did repurchase them at a profit in London, where American securities, along with all others, were distinctly heavy. The London quotations came ⅝ to 1 per cent. below New York parity, but on the opening here the big bull factors got under the market and supported prices in a manner perfectly disgusting to a stubborn-minded bear. Brokers reported from the floor that they detected continuous pressure upon the general list, as on several preceding days, but the market absorbed stocks as before, and held during the greater part of the session at about Thursday's closing level of prices. The aggressive strength was in a few stocks, like American Smelting and Refining, the Hill railroad issues, Kansas City Southern, and United States Reduction and Refining. The market was unresponsive to the leadership of American Smelting. The Russian situation and the talk of gold exports were simply ignored. London sold stocks freely in this market. When this pressure ceased, and the London market was closed, an unsuccessful professional effort was made to rally the market. Positive weakness developed in the last hour.

American Smelting and Refining touched a new high record yesterday at 133⅝, selling higher than Union Pacific.

The Gates crowd has not been so prominent in the market since the collapse of its operations in Chicago Subway stock.

It is rumored that Mr. Keene has been selling Metropolitan Street Railway. He was bulling it recently. The impression is that any selling on this decline traceable to him would more likely be for long account than short selling.

The United States Steel stocks have been distinctly heavy for several days. There has been unmistakable evidence of liquidation, principally in the common stock. It looks as if some large speculative followers of the advance were getting out. The buying, on the other hand, is said to be of a very good character. It is evident that the stock is strongly supported under selling pressure. People who have followed the bull side of the Steel stocks steadily for a year or more have big profits on this level of prices, and with so much diversity of good opinion as to the general market situation, liquidation of large speculative holdings is not at all surprising. It is a good market to sell on, and there are many who can afford to sell. The constant pressure of selling this week, however, is attracting a good deal of attention owing to the fact that the statement of earnings for the third quarter of this year will be forthcoming early next week. There have been rumors that this statement would not come up to the extravagant expectations generally entertained in Wall Street. A few weeks ago the speculative enthusiasm for Steel common led to unwarranted estimates of what the corporation would show for this third quarter. Well-informed persons regard Steel common purely as a speculation. It is not easily understood, however, why the preferred stock, now a seasoned 7 per cent. security, does not sell higher. It compares unfavorably in price with other 7 per cent. preferred industrial stocks, notably American Locomotive preferred. To be in line with the market, it is argued, Steel preferred ought to be selling at least around 115. The reason for its selling around 105 probably is that a lot of speculative stock accumulated last year between 50 and 70, has been coming upon the market.

It looks as if the bull crowd in American Locomotive common had been able to distribute some stock on this level.

Friends of Rock Island have said that the earnings would begin to improve this Autumn. The Rock Island and St. Louis and San Francisco systems together show for the month of September a decrease of $218,485 in net earnings. People naturally ask what the Rock Island combination can do in less prosperous times if this is the best it can do with conditions as they are. There was no renewal of the selling pressure upon the Rock Island issues yesterday. They were only heavy.

As long ago as June certain banking interests said that the money market would tighten up after the end of August. Their predictions were unheeded; in some quarters they were ridiculed. Call money has touched 8 per cent. When the gold import movement began and the bull crowd in stocks was certain that we could get no end of money from the other side, predicting that we should get, anyway, $50,000,000, the same banking interests merely said that gold which did not belong here was likely to go back. The import movement stopped short of $9,000,000, and Wall Street is now on the point of sending the gold back.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Oct. 27.—The local money market is unchanged. The usual table of rates, &c., follows:

Call loans, 5@5½ per cent.; time loans on collateral, 4½@5½ per cent.; time loans on mercantile paper, 4¾@5 per cent.; Clearing House loans, 5 per cent.; New York funds at par; clearings, $25,258,863; balances, $1,794,172; Sub-Treasury debit, $152,277.

North Butte was the feature to-day, while Centennial, Copper Range, Boston Consolidated, and later Isle Royale came in for a good share of activity and strength. Prices continued strong, and were fairly strong until the last hour, when the whole list became active and higher, Isle Royale advancing to 26⅞ in the late trading. The close was strong and at around the best figures of the day. Complete transactions follow:

PORT MAKING GRAIN RECORD.

Freight Rates to Liverpool Doubled Since Oct. 1—Demand Keeps Up.

Exports of grain from New York promise to be larger this year than ever before. Shippers' rates have gone up nearly 100 per cent. in a month, but nothing can stop the movement of all kinds of grain to Europe. Only the car famine, said a member of one of the big exporting firms yesterday, can keep down the shipments. Though the exports in corn and wheat are very large, it is for oats and barley that the demand is most urgent.

About 240,000 bushels of wheat were shipped from New York last Wednesday. On any one of many days the shipments of corn have amounted to 300,000. A rise in prices seems to have remarkably little effect on the European demand. Attracted by the big freight rates, tramp ships from all over the world are coming into New York to get grain cargoes. On Oct. 1 the rate to Liverpool was just half what it was yesterday. The statistician of the Produce Exchange yesterday estimated this year's corn crop at 2,700,000,000 bushels.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 27.—Lehigh Valley contributed nearly one-half of the business transacted at the Philadelphia Stock Exchange to-day. It again established a new high record—83⅞. From 81 the price receded to 80¼, at which figure heavy buying developed, and before it had been completed the quotation was rushed up to the record price. The movement appeared to be a continuation of that which has been in progress all week, but the late break in New York was followed here by profit-taking sales, the price receding to 82¼, at which it was offered at the close.

Lehigh Navigation followed, advancing from 111½ to 113¾, and being offered at the close at 112⅛. Reading was not very active, the business in it being largely arbitrage, and this was also true of United States Steel. Pressure in United Gas Improvement was continued, but offers were well taken, as they were also of Philadelphia Electric. General Asphalt preferred was off 1½ points.

These were the most important price changes, although the market as a whole displayed a heavy tone.

Total sales, stocks, 38,330 shares.

CHICAGO, Oct. 27.—There was no market for New York exchange. Time and call loans, 4@5 per cent.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Sugar Tests Must Be Made Under Present Regulations—Other Decisions.

In a decision by Judge Somerville, the Board of United States General Appraisers sustained yesterday claims filed by the Franklin Sugar Refining Company of Philadelphia, regarding the manner of making tests and retests on imported sugars. Another question involved in the importers' suit against the Government dealt with the allowance to be made for the absorption by the sugars of sea water. Many thousands of bags of various kinds of sugar are affected by the board's decision, which is favorable to the contention of the Franklin Company. Judge Somerville finds that the Collector and the Appraiser of Customs at Philadelphia erred in not making the various tests and retests under the present regulations rather than under those of 1899. The customs authorities are directed to reliquidate the entries in accordance with the finding of the board.

Judge Waite wrote a decision for the board denying claims made by Franchi Bonugli of Boston relative to the classification of sliced and dried mushrooms. The goods were assessed at 40 per cent. ad valorem, and were claimed to be dutiable either at 25 per cent. or wholly free of duty under another paragraph of the tariff law.

Other importers' protests overruled were those of Park & Tilford, Hough & de Constans, and R. F. Downing & Co., New York.

These claims were sustained: Kaufmann & Warshauer, Kaufmann, Aron & Warshauer, Benedict & Warner, Cornelius Kahlen, National Cash Register Company, and Morton & Co., New York.

Protests by Spingarn Brothers and others, and R. F. Downing & Co., New York, were partially sustained.

HIGGINSON FENCE SENTENCED

Although He Has Six Reasons for Leniency in Jewel Theft Case.

Notwithstanding his enumeration of six reasons for leniency, Ralph Warner, convicted of receiving the jewelry stolen from Miss Dorothy Higginson last July, was sent to Sing Sing for four years by Judge Cowing, in General Sessions, yesterday. The jewelry was taken from the residence of James J. Higginson, the banker, at 16 East Forty-first Street.

Soon afterward Dr. Park, the tutor of the Higginson family, was arrested when he landed from a steamer at Christiansand, Norway, and held on suspicion of being guilty of the theft. An anonymous letter sent to the Pinkertons later led to the recovery of the stolen jewelry in the possession of Warner and the tracing of the theft to John Zedra, an ex-convict, now serving time at Concord, N. H. The release of Dr. Park followed immediately.

Warner's reasons why he thought himself entitled to leniency were that he had already spent more than two months in jail; that he would appear as a witness against the real thief; that he would be kept in prison until that man was tried; that he had received nothing of the proceeds from the stolen jewelry; that he had made known the truth unconditionally, and that he had helped to clear an innocent man.

OPPOSE TOBACCO COUPONS.

Independent Manufacturers May Ask Congress to Restrict Them.

At yesterday's session of the convention of the Independent Tobacco Manufacturers' Association of the United States at the Hotel Astor, President Hiram D. Miller told of the contest between the independent manufacturers and the Tobacco Trust. He said that a drastic rule has been adopted by which any manufacturer found to have dealings with the trust is compelled to leave the association. Speaking of what has already been achieved in the fight, Mr. Miller said:

"We have to-day fair competition with the Tobacco Trust, not only in the purchase of leaf tobacco, but also in the disposing of our manufactured products.

"The manner in which coupons are being distributed," said Mr. Miller, taking up another topic, "has the effect of making many employes dishonest, and is demoralizing to the retail dealer in general." He said he understood that bills would be introduced in Congress requiring that a cash value should be placed upon all coupons issued, and making the tax on tobacco that has a coupon 3 cents per pound higher than on tobacco that has none. The association decided to have some sort of label or mark on all goods made by its members. Officers were elected as follows: President, Hiram D. Miller of Philadelphia; Vice President Hugh Campbell, Richmond; Secretary, Walter H. Friedlander, Cincinnati; Treasurer, John W. Surbrug, New York.

Boy's Testimony Convicts Father.

A jury in the Supreme Court at White Plains yesterday convicted John Johnson, an ex-convict, of murdering his wife. Judge Keogh immediately sentenced him to be executed at Sing Sing in the week beginning Dec. 18. Johnson was mainly convicted on the evidence of his twelve-year-old son, Stephen. His testimony brought tears to the eyes of the spectators.

Suburban Property

Suburban property doesn't show itself to the greatest advantage when it has a foot of snow on it. Now, before Winter sets in, is the time to display it. If you have suburban property for sale, advertise it in The New York Times. The readers of The Times have means and intelligence. They appreciate good propositions.

GRASPING THE OPPORTUNITY

What Has Made Men Rich

Trace down the pages of the biographical history of the wealthy men of our country and you will find at least 75 per cent. of them who began life as a poor boy, but industry, economy, and energy have made their names household ones in the business and professional world. You will say that luck makes men wealthy. It is not so; though there are cases—a small percentage—where a windfall dropped into the lap of some man by his predecessor or his relationship or in the game of chance. But where there is one thus fortunate there are ten others who started on life's highway with strong arm and a clear mind, without friends, without money, and without influence, to battle against the whole world and mold for themselves by energy and endurance a fortune honorably made.

My dear wage-earner, if you desire the proof and convincing evidence of the headline of this advertisement, how men became wealthy, go out and ask the first successful man you know what made him rich—how did he start on nothing and become wealthy. He will repeat what we have said: GRASPING THE OPPORTUNITY.

The poor man, or the young man to-day without means, has greater chances and finer opportunities of getting rich than the boy or man twenty years ago.

Dame Fortune Knocks To-day at Your Door and Shouts, "Invest Now In the Suburbs! Grasp the Opportunity!"

Land Has Increased in Price Since 1900 in Westchester 500 Per Cent. Land Has Increased in Kings Since 1900 300 Per Cent. Land Has Increased in Queens Since 1900 500 Per Cent. Let Us Picture Now for You the Next Five Years and the Locality Where You Can Get Rich if You Will Grasp This Opportunity.

The great activity for investment and for homes will in the next five years he just outside of Greater New York on Long Island—just where the wage-earner can reach inside of 30 minutes for a 5 or 10 cent fare; where the line of travel by steam or electricity will be frequent day and night.

The Star of Prosperity Is Now Rising In the East, Coming Over the Fertile Fields of Long Island, and To-day It Reveals a Tale of Prophecy and Makes Known the Future Outside of Greater New York.

TO-DAY.

60 Trains a Day. One Every 20 Minutes. 10 Minutes from Jamaica. 30 Minutes from New York. 5 and 10 Cent Fare.

Finest Roads. Cheapest Land. Best Railroad Service Outside of Greater New York. Population 5,000.

1910.

Beautiful Parks. Beautiful Homes. Largest Municipality on Long Island. With a Population of 30,000. Great Industrial Centre.

Lots and plots of land at Mineola will increase in value 500 per cent. in 5 years. Why not? Star of New York destiny says so. Lots at the Bronx have increased from $500 to $5,000 in the past 2 years.

MINEOLA.

It lies just three miles outside of Greater New York—just twelve minutes' ride from Jamaica by steam cars, where three lines of the Long Island Railroad centre—all trains from the North Line, from Oyster Bay and Roslyn, all trains from the east on the Main Line, from Greenport west; all trains from the south, Hempstead and Garden City; and, in addition to all, the connection with New York by the Queens County electric car line. No such railroad facilities or transportation anywhere outside of Jamaica. WHERE CAN YOU GET SUCH SERVICE? WHERE CAN YOU GET SUCH AN ACCESSIBLE PLACE FOR A HOME?

WE HAVE BOUGHT $150,000 WORTH OF THE MOST CENTRALLY LOCATED LAND IN MINEOLA.

We have bought it close to schools, churches, stores, and within a few blocks of the depot, where every choice residence lot we have ought to be business property in ten years. And the announcement of this sale will pass through this city into the homes of hundreds of thousands of investors and homeseekers to-day. AND WE BELIEVE EVERY LOT WE HAVE WILL BE SOLD IN TEN DAYS. Such things have happened to us before. Therefore, we want you to be there at the Excepting therefrom, however, a strip ninety-eight (98) feet in width, front and rear, and thirty-three and twenty-one hundredths (33.20) feet in depth on the westerly side thereof and thirty-two and ninety-four one-hundredths (32.94) feet in depth on the easterly side thereof, being that portion of the said premises vested in the City of New York, in proceedings taken for the widening of the Southern Westchester Turnpike Road.

And, also, all those certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land, situate, lying, and being in the former Town and County of Westchester, now in the Twenty-fourth Ward, in the Borough of the Bronx, City of New York, County and State of New York, known on a certain map entitled "Map of property of the Estate of William H. Coles, July, 1893, and filed in the office of the Register of the County of Westchester by the numbers 9 and 10, which said lots taken together are bounded and described as follows:
Beginning at a point on the southerly side of Fifth Street distant westerly from the southwesterly corner of Fifth Street and Avenue B one hundred and five (105) feet; thence running southerly along lots numbered one, two, three, and four, one hundred and eight (108) feet to lot number sixteen; thence westerly along lots numbers fifteen and sixteen, fifty (50) feet to lot number eleven; thence northerly along lot number eleven, one hundred and eight (108) feet to the southerly side of Fifth Street; thence easterly along the southerly side of Fifth Street fifty (50) feet to the point or place of beginning.
And, also, all those certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land, situate, lying, and being in the Twenty-third Ward of the City of New York, in the County and State of New York, being a part of lot number 401 on the "Map of West Morrisania, being a part of the farm of William H. Morris, Esq., in the Town of West Farms, County of Westchester, N. Y.," made by Andrew Findlay, Surveyor, dated Westchester, June 1st, 1852, and now on file in the office of the Register of Westchester County, which said lots hereby conveyed taken together are bounded and described as follows:
Beginning at a point on the easterly line or side of Girard Avenue, distant fifty (50) feet southerly from the northerly boundary line of said lot number 401, and about five hundred and twenty-five (525) feet southerly from the southeasterly corner of 165th Street (formerly Ella Street) and said avenue; thence running easterly at right angles to Girard Avenue one hundred (100) feet; thence southerly and parallel with Girard Avenue seventy-five (75) feet; thence westerly and at right angles to Girard Avenue one hundred (100) feet to the easterly line or side of said avenue; and thence northerly and along the said easterly line or side of said avenue seventy-five (75) feet to the point or place of beginning.
The following are diagrams of the several parcels to be sold. The street number is unknown. The premises are unimproved.

$161,000,000 WATER PLAN APPROVED BY CITY BOARD

Consent of State Commission Must Now Be Obtained.

WORK MAY BE DONE BY 1925

A Daily Supply of 500,000,000 Gallons Will Be Conveyed from the Catskills in Underground Conduit.

Plans of the local Board of Water Supply for going to the Catskills for an additional city water supply were approved by the Board of Estimate yesterday. The whole project will cost $161,000,000, and the board has approved the proposition to make $112,000,000 available for immediate use. The Corporation Counsel has been instructed to apply to the State Water Commission immediately for consent to carry out the city plans.

The action of the board was taken after a public hearing, and commits the city to the plans of the old Burr-Hering-Freeman commission, as amplified by the new Board of Water Supply, to tap the Esopus, Rondout, Catskill, and Schoharie watersheds to obtain a daily supply of 500,000,000 gallons of water for the city. The original $112,000,000 appropriation will be enough to build a great reservoir at Ashokan and to construct the conduits to carry the supply to New York. The scheme, the board reports, may be carried to completion by 1925.

When the report and resolutions were read, Mayor McClellan expressed his appreciation of the work done by the local Board of Water Supply.

"On behalf of the city," he said, "I congratulate and thank the commission for the prompt and efficient manner in which, after only four months, it has submitted this solution of the problem which has confronted New York."

Some Sources Now Cut Off.

The Commissioners, J. Edward Simmons, Charles N. Chadwick, and Charles A. Shaw, were appointed by the Mayor after the Legislature had passed an enabling act last Winter. Their chief engineer, J. Waldo Smith, who made the report, complimented the work of the Burr-Hering-Freedman commission, and expressed regret that much of the source of the water supply recommended in the first report of that commission has since been cut off by legislative enactment. This refers to the old Wappingers and Fishkill water sheds in Dutchess County, since made unavailable by the Smith bill.

The report recommends in brief that the new aqueduct shall be continued all the way from the main distributing reservoir at Hill View to Ashokan reservoir, and that immediate application be made to the State to enable the city to draw upon the desired sources of supply.

These sources include Esopus Creek, Rondout Creek at a point near Napanoch, as well as three small tributary streams; Schoharie Creek, at a point near Prattsville, and Catskill Creek, at a point about one mile north of East Durham, together with six small tributary streams. The first work to be done under the report will be the portion lying between the Ashokan reservoir and the Croton watershed, a distance of fifty-four miles.

All the members of the State Water Commission were present at the hearing yesterday. Mayor McClellan asked for the opposition first, and he was faced by representatives from every county affected. Lorin J. Eggleston rspresented Dutchess; Luther C. Warner and Peter Walker represented Albany; Michael O'Hara and George Van Valkenburg represented Greene; Eugens F. Patten and Everett Fowler represented Ulster; Edgar K. Brown and Harvey Green represented Westchester; George Hine and John W. Towner represented Putnam; Arthur Wood and Orson Spickerman represented Schoharie, and George Moshier and Ingraham Stubley represented Orange.

To be Conveyed Underground.

Of the representatives only Mr. Hine had questions to ask. He wanted to know if the water was to pass through his county in a canal. Mr. Smith explained it would be carried through an underground conduit.

Lawrence Veiller, Secretary of the City Club, was on hand as usual, and wanted to talk. Controller Grout said time was precious, and that as there was no opposition there was no need of argument.

Mr. Veiller insisted on making the suggestion that the Board of Water Supply be instructed to be speedy in its work.

"In view of the work already done by the board," said the Controller, "we consider your suggestion an impertinence."

Mr. Veiller subsided. None of the State Commissioners would say anything about the plans, although invited to do so by President Simmons of the local board.

FACTORY GIRLS ABLAZE.

Newark Workmen Beat Flames from Clothing, but Two May Die.

Five women were badly burned and two of them will probably die as the result of their burns in a fire last night in the factory of M. Gould, Sons & Co., 61, 63, and 63 Hamilton Avenue, Newark.

The fire started just as the factory was about to close. The works had been shut down for the night, and the girls, who were working on the fourth floor, known as the lacquer room, were about to leave. Anna Glazer, a girl, upset a candle from one of the benches into a pot of chemicals, causing an explosion. The flames immediately ignited the clothing of the five young women, and they rushed from the room, panic-stricken.

As they ran down stairs some of the workmen who had not yet departed seized the young girls and beat the flames from their garments. Lizzie Gardity, one of the girls, became frenzied with pain and succeeded in eluding the rescuers. She ran down the four flights of stairs to the office, where she was intercepted and her clothing torn from her body to save her life.

LIFE-SAVING BY MOTOR BOAT.

Nonsinkable Craft with Power Device Tested at Sandy Hook.

An interesting and successful test of a power lifeboat built for the United States Life-Saving Service was made yesterday in a run from Bayonne to Sandy Hook and back. The boat was designed by Capt. C. H. McLellan, Chief Inspector of the Life-Saving Service, and built by the Electric Launch Company at Bayonne.

At Sandy Hook there was a critical inspection of the boat by the members of the life-saving station. Under sail and under engine power the boat gave excellent results. In the straight run a speed of 10 knots an hour was maintained. The run from Sandy Hook back to Bayonne was finished in 1 hour and 50 minutes.

A standard twenty-horse-power engine of the four-cylinder auto-marine type is stowed away in the forward air compartment. The length of the boat is 34 feet, and it is 8 feet in width. It is of the self-righting, self-bailing, non-sinkable type, of which the Government has about fifty in use. If, after future tests, the boat meets all requirements, several may be built for Government use.

FOR CONSUMPTIVE HOSPITAL.

City Will Spend $2,000,000—$200,000 More for Playgrounds.

At its regular meeting yesterday the Board of Estimate appropriated $800,000 toward the construction of the tuberculosis hospital at Staten Island and bound itself to appropriate the balance of the $2,000,000 needed to carry out the plans in detail.

Charities Commissioner Tully explained the needs of the institution. He is building it in units, and it will be a year or more before all the appropriation can be used.

"Could you not make better terms if you gave all work out at once?" asked President Littleton of Brooklyn.

Mr. Tully thought not, and the Controller said prices are higher now than they ever were both for labor and materials. He said that 800 beds would be provided.

Gen. Wingate of the Board of Education reported that it had been found impossible to get athletic fields for all the boroughs for $300,000. He asked for $200,000 more, and the board voted it. Borough President Ahearn asked if Manhattan was to have a field. Mr. Wingate said it would cost too much. Then Mr. Ahearn insisted that his plan, advanced last week, that the recreation piers in Manhattan be covered and be made Winter gymnasiums be acted on. The requisite appropriation was promised as soon as the budget is disposed of.

The board adjourned until Tuesday, when the budget for 1908 will be formally approved and published. It will show an increase of approximately $8,000,000, of which nearly $3,000,000 is for the schools.

WHERE SQUADRONS WILL LIE.

To Anchor in Single Line North from Fifty-fourth Street.

An order defining the position of the British and American squadrons in the Hudson River next month came from Washington to the New York Custom House yesterday. It is signed by V. H. Metcalf, Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor. According to its provisions the southernmost British vessel will be anchored off Fifty-fourth Street, and from there the line of fighting ships, including those of both nations, will stretch up the Hudson River.

The vessels will be in single line; this line will be permitted to encroach upon the main ship channel on the east side of the river "until some of the American squadron may be anchored wholly within the said main ship channel." The last part of Secretary Metcalf's order reads as follows:

"The proper officers will notify the commanders of the squadrons that the war vessels should carefully avoid fouling the telegraph cables crossing the river at Seventy-ninth Street. Notice should be taken of the twenty-four-foot spot in the middle of the river off Eighty-sixth Street. Between 126th Street and 180th Street a space of 1,000 feet in the clear will be reserved for the ferry between 180th Street, New York, and Edgewater. The anchorage buoys off Sixtieth and Seventieth Streets, respectively, will be removed to avoid fouling, as soon as the British ships come to anchor, and will be replaced when they depart."

A CONTEMPTIBLE SCAMP.

Justice's Remarks to a Father Who Falsely Accused His Daughter.

William Grinnell of 415 Greenwich Street appeared in the Children's Court yesterday as complainant against his fourteen-year-old daughter, Margaret, whom he accused of theft. Agent Bohn of the Children's Society told the court that Grinnell had trumped up the charge to get rid of his daughter. Grinnell had had the girl arrested twice before on groundless charges.

The girl was arrested on Monday and the case was put over because the father, in the opinion of the court, was intoxicated. Grinnell did not put in an appearance yesterday until brought to court on an order. Justice Zeller told him that he was intoxicated again and asked him if he wished to press the charge.

"I do," was the reply. "I came home Monday and found her at my trunk. She had my watch in her hand, and I know she was trying to steal it."

Justice Zeller declared that Grinnell was not a proper guardian for the child, and sent her to the Catholic Protectory. Then he turned to Grinnell.

"A more heartless, worthless, miserable, and contemptible scamp I have never seen in a court of justice or out of one," he said. "The whipping post is none too good for you. If it lay within my power, I would punish you severely, as you justly deserve. You are a disgrace, not only to yourself, to your family, and to those who know you, but to the whole community. I regret that I cannot, at this moment, send you to the penitentiary. You are a coward of the meanest kind to persecute this little child, your daughter."

A NEW POET.

The Uncommon Worth of Two Recent Volumes of Verse by Arthur Lewis.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW OF BOOKS by HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD.

THE lovers of true poetry of the antique spirit, full of thought, originality, and a natural unforced music, will read with a new pleasure "Days of Old Rome," by Arthur Lewis, a young English poet, published by Elkin Matthews, London, illustrated in outline by the fine and delicate pencil of Edith Calvert, (Mrs. Matthews,) together with a smaller and later volume entitled "Ways of Verse."

In turning these pages it would seem as if a new poet were singing. Although there may be here a Shelley-like sigh, and there a suggestion of Blake's insight or of Wordsworth's outlook, and occasionally an almost Shakespearean sonorousness of line or couplet, yet the spirit of the poems is entirely new and individual.

The subjects of the first volume are altogether those suggested by the sight and thought of Old Rome. "The Dead City"; the story of the apparition of the twin gods at the fountain of Juturna in their blaze of beauty and strength, after the battle they had helped win, an apostrophe to Catullus; the lament of Ovid in exile, over his verses of which he knew "never praise of their making shall sound in the ears of their maker," a wonderfully strong and pathetic poem:

Here must it ever be mine to abide through the years and accomplish,
Lonesome, the weight of the day's long drawn desolation and silence
Soulless of barren shores, and waters that slumber or gnash them
Whitely betimes with the foam and the curse, and the shriek and the seething,
Fierce from the East, and for me but to add my despair to the tempest.

ANOTHER great poem is "In Etruria," given at the tragic moment when the blind old seer declares his people are—

Beyond all impotence of ill
Our cup to fill
With fuller draught and potion of despair.
* * * * * * *
And none shall know from what or whence we came;
Our very name,
Our speech, the graven fragment of a phrase;
Our better days,
The linger of tradition, and the theme
Of men who dream,
Theirs having been—
A pleasant land
Alive, and fanned
With airs of inspiration, and with thought
Mysterious, taught,
Intuitive of hill and wood and vale
And starlight pale,
And converse with the voices that imhue
All in the view
And reach of immortality's delight.

In an equally strong vein the reader will find "Panem et Circenses," "The Gaul in the Mamertine," "Paul on the Cellan," "By Night Upon the Appian Way," and "Ad Ostia, A. D. 150."

GAIUS.

'Tis good
Betimes to look back at her teeming streets,
Her palaces and fanes, from some still spread
Of air and sun and silence, as is this.

LUCIUS.

I had thought we ne'er should reach it.

GAIUS.

True, O true,
'Twas a long tramp; but full of mighty dreams.

For pure beauty and pure poetry it would be difficult to find the superior in contemporary verse of such poems as "Pausilypon" and "In the Acilian Gerdens." Indeed, we have few anywhere finer and sweeter than the latter. It is replete with grace and charm and dignity in phrase and line and passage:

I dare to think of thee forever fixed
In that sufficiency of silent thought
Whereby the head just droops upon its stem,
A lily-weight of loveliness too pure
To let the bold sun look within its soul.
* * * Something sole
And central to this exquisite device
Of cypress, ilex, and the circuit grace
Of pure pentelic stone.

THE other volume of Mr. Lewis's poems, the "Ways of Verse," is an expression of idyllic English life in field and lane and by the hearth. In "Mens Sacra" one feels a rare intimacy with nature, in comprehension of what the poet calls the "good gospel of the morn"; and other poems betray the exquisite sensitiveness which gives that atmosphere of innermost poetry foreign to startling phrase or metaphor.

Some of these poems are finely dramatic, showing the hand practiced in the remarkable play of "Ginevra," published a year or two ago. Many of them are tender love poems:

For I will see thee live in all things fair,
And for the wistful view shall never fail
The rendering how
Of lip and brow,
The course and mystery of that gathered hair.
* * * * * * * *
And all the silent intercourse to be,
With rock or stream, gray moor or mossy fell,
And desert shore by lone untraveled sea,
Shall of thy life things so delighted tell
That thus, O sure
As doth endure
Fair Earth, be thou immortal unto me,

All of these verses are sustained and strong; the poem "Light of Love," both in beauty and treatment, exceeds the effect of Rossetti's "Jenny." And where shall we find anything tenderer and sweeter than this "Unchanged":

Sweetheart, I see thee not with beauty seared,
The wrinkled ill of time's disfiguring touch;
But thine, for me, be still thet trait endeared,
As ever such
To longing thought of youth and love appeared.
For me, no cloak, nor grayness of decline
Can, shrouding, hide thy soul's dear shape eterne,
Whose light within—my lamp—shall ever shine,
Must ever burn
And bear me forth, and bring me faith divine.

Among other of the verses in this very unpretentious little volume—which, by the way, the poet has printed with his own hand—"The Wolf Boy," "The Pyre," and "Speak, Speak!" show a new and great, if not thoroughly trained, power; while "Gethsemane," "The Prophet," "The Awakening," and others as well are of deep philosophic thought, and "Where Silence Was" and "The Harvest Moon" are surcharged with loveliness. Indeed, the one fault of the poet, if it is a fault, is that he sees more beauty than, with the great reserve of his verse and his feeling, and a not altogether flexible technique, he is able to express.

"THE TORCH."

Prof. George E. Woodberry's Lectures on "The Race Power in Literature."

TO FIND the secret of intellectual evolution, to explain the continuity which is to be seen in it and account for the breaks which also are to be seen—this certainly is a fascinating pursuit, and few professional students of literature escape its allurement. Prof. George Edward Woodberry has certain qualifications for the task which justify his undertaking it, though he may fall perceptibly short of its achievement. A couple of years since he delivered before the Lowell Institute of Boston a series of eight lectures with practically this aim. Their announced subject was "Race Power in Literature," and they are now published by McClure, Phillips & Co. under the title of "The Torch," which is appropriate in its indefiniteness.

The theorizing portion of Prof. Woodberry's extremely interesting little volume does not strike the unprofessional student of literature as the best portion. It seems to suffer from an excess of emotion. It is slightly overeloquent and proportionately defective in clearness. The writer is impressed and moved by certain aspects of history and seeks to present them, with entire sincerity, but not altogether convincingly, as in such passages as this:

Race history is a perpetual celebration of the mass. The Cross initials every page with its broad gold, and he whose eye misses that letter has lost the clue to the meaning. I do not refer to the self-devotion of individuals, the sacred lives of the race. I speak of the involuntary element in the life of nations, or what seems such on the vast scale of social life. Always some great culture is dying to enrich the soil of new harvests, some civilization is crumbling to rubbish to be the hill of a more beautiful city, some race is spending itself that a lower and more barbarous world may inherit its stored treasure house.

THE idea of sacrifice here unfolded is precious to Prof. Woodberry and is in a marked degree the prominent, if not the controlling, idea in his work. But we cannot find that it is necessarily involved in the events which he describes. Undoubtedly there has been a series of civilizations and nations, and there has been a series of great cultures. But it does not appear clear that each member of these series perished in the interest of its successor. Rather each member was in considerable degree merged in its successor, contributed to its force, continued in that way a really vital existence. Particularly is this true in the matter of cultures. The Greek nation, the Roman nation, as a politically organized entity, passed away, but the descendants of the Greeks and those of the Romans mingled with other races, and were a most important element in the resulting combination. Still more obviously did Greek culture and later Greco-Roman culture merge in the evolving intellectual life of Europe and of the world. The characteristics of sacrifice in the process are not apparent. And in modern times, say, broadly, since the close of the mediaeval period, not only has the absolute subjugation of peoples ceased practically to occur, but the interaction of intellectual currents has become so free and is likely to become so much more free that the "dying" of a great culture is extremely difficult to imagine, and it is still more difficult to demonstrate.

WHEN Prof. Woodberry leaves the field of theory, or, rather, when he imports into that field specific appreciation and criticism, he is often extremely instructive, and, what is more important, if he will pardon us for saying so, he is stimulating, satisfying, and quite delightful. What he has to say of Shelley particularly, in whom he takes great joy, and his acute and sympathetic estimate of Milton, are things which the lovers of these poets or of their poetry may feed upon with relish and digest to profit. And though it is late in the day to repeat it, and needless, it is a pleasure to acknowledge the sincerity, the pure-mindedness, the whole-hearted love of the best that shine in Prof. Woodberry's pages.

CHILDREN'S BOOKS.

Those for Girls and Those for Boys—A Selection of Boys' Books.

II.

THERE is an interesting difference between the boys' and the girls' books which is noticeable at the holiday season, when they appear in large numbers and can be compared. If the supply of books, as of other things, is supposed to meet the demand, then boys are the greatest readers, for their books outnumber those written especially for girls' reading at least 6 to 1. But while the boys have quantity, the girls are more likely to have quality in their books. There has been a great change in books for girls within the last twenty, or say thirty, years, if one wishes to look back so far. At that time the girls' books that were worth reading were few. They were of the goody-goody order, with little sense or character, and inordinately dull. Miss Alcott's books were appearing, but they were exceptional. Girls who looked for life interest in the stories they read took their brothers' Oliver Optics, and were quite well enough satisfied, many of them.

But there was a wide field to cover for the girls, particularly as their lives broadened with school and college life, and many good writers have come to the fore to give them books of their own and they have proved to be very good books. They are human books telling about girls as they really are, doing the things girls would be likely to do in a natural way—real studies of human nature. That is where they differ from a good proportion of the boys' books, and why there are fewer of them. It requires a writer with some degree of ability to write a human nature story, and almost any one once getting the recipe could write the average boy's book of adventure.

These adventure stories have changed but little. There is a little more realism in the setting than in the earlier books, but otherwise there is the same youthful hero doing impossible acts of heroism and bravery, and always coming out alive, well, and entirely successful from the most difficult undertakings. Make a casual study of the geography, climate, natural conditions and animals of a stupid little boy, but later they remembered it.

An interesting book, not large, and with many illustrations, is the "Boys Who Became Famous Men," by Harriet Pearl Skinner, illustrated by Sears Gallagher, (Little, Brown & Co., $1.) There are stories of eight of these boys—artists, musicians, and writers—Giotto, Bach, Byron, Gainsborough, Handel, Coleridge, Canova, and Chopin. The stories are told simply, are readable, and the pictures are pleasing.

"Shipwrecked in Greenland," by Arthur R. Thompson, (Little, Brown & Co., $1.50,) is an exciting story of life in the arctic regions based upon fact. The incidents are many of them those experienced by the expedition which started out on the ship Miranda in 1894 and came to grief. Names of Danish officials and fishermen are genuine. There is a history of an arctic hurricane, adventures on an iceberg and in an open boat, and close quarters with a polar bear. But eventually Philip Schuyler, who is a boy of 14 at the beginning of the trip, and all his friends reach home safely, as all boys in most story books do. The pictures are from photographs.

Cowboy life, Indians, and buffalo are among the interesting features of "The Lost Treasure Cave," by Everett McNeil, (E. P. Dutton & Co., $1.50.) It is a Colorado story and Harry and Dick, with Bill Burke, the Champion Black Catapult, and Loretta, a pretty little cowgirl, do many wonderful things. There are marvelous escapes, mysterious adventures in the "Chamber of the Dead Kings," the Champion Black Catapult takes a big bear in his most approved fashion, with his head, and the treasure for which much is risked is too interesting to make it wise to spoil the story by telling about it. The book is illustrated.

PINKEY Perkins, Just a Boy," by Capt. Harold Hammond, United States Army, (the Century Company, $1.50,) is a little different from most boys' books. Pinkey starts in at the very beginning with an "affinity," who continues to be the chief object of his concern to the last chapter. He is so much concerned about the young lady that he gives up a long-desired air gun to get the Affinity, whose name is Hattie Warren, a big valentine. Pinkey is a bad boy in many ways. He does not always behave in school just as he should, though when he gets "27 licks with the ruler" he takes it without a wink; he has his head clipped without asking his mother, distributes a couple of hundred free tickets to a show in town, which is not quite as bad really as it sounds, and is generally what he should not be. He is never monotonous, however, and there are many pictures by George Varian to show exactly how Pinkey looks.

As good as a story is "The Boy Linqualities, and there are many incidents of college life that are entertaining.

"The Young Section Hand," by Burton E. Stevenson, (L. C. Page & Co., illustrated, Boston, $1,) is a good straightforward boys' story of 278 pages. In it Allan West, a boy of 17, who has lost his family and has started out to make his way for himself, starts in at the beginning of railroad work and makes a success of it. There are wrecks, children saved from the wheels of the engine, and a ghost, which causes some unpleasantness, turns out to be only a tramp trying to get on over his head a clean shirt that some one has given him. There are other books to come showing how Allan progresses after he finishes section work.

"The Fort in the Wilderness" is the fifth volume of the Colonial Series by Edward Stratemeyer, (Lee & Shepard Boston, $1.25.) It is a story of the siege of Detroit and the attack upon Port Pitt. There is much Indian fighting in it, adventures with bears, captures by Indians, and exciting escapes, and everything comes right in the end for the principal characters.

A story for every day in the year is something new in books. There are two volumes, "Fifty-two Stories for Boys" and "Fifty-two Stories for Girls," edited by Alfred H. Miles, (Appleton, $1.50 each.) The stories are classified for boys into school stories, those of the sea, sword and gun, adventure, &c. The girls have adventure stories, too, others about school and home, a few "in the world of faery" and romance in history. There are pictures.

Kirk Munroe has a first-class story of the Japanese war, this year, in "For the Mikado; or, A Japanese Middy in Action," (Harpers, $1.25.) Takahaki is the middy, who gets his naval education at Annapolis, where he is the chum and room mate of one Dunster Casimir Brownleigh. The friendship is the preface to the exciting events of the book. "Taka" is called home at the outbreak of the war. The Casimir in Dunster's name means that he has Polish blood in his veins, which from the oppression of the Russians in Poland and of his mother's family makes him an ardent sympathizer with Japan. An opening as a war correspondent takes him to the front. There with his friend Takahaki he has many adventures. The latter receives high naval honors, and Dunster, who is really, though a good American, the Count Casimir of Warsaw, is made a Knight of the Golden Falcon, a famous Japanese order.

"Dan Monroe: A Story of Bunker Hill," is another historical book of W. O. Stoddard, (Lothrop Publishing Company, $1.25.) The hero is a real boy, Dan Monroe, who was the drummer boy of the Lexington militia, and his companion and closest friend is Nat Harrington, the fifer. There is the Concord fight, the battle of Bunker Hill, arrival of Washington, Indians, Quakers, and many pict-

VIOLINS.

Olga Rasster's Book About Famous Fiddles and Their Artificers.

THE violin, its makers, and their supposed secrets, are an inexhaustible subject of literary activity, and one that the dilettante is especially fond of expatiating upon. It seems clear that the dilettante is holding forth in this new addition to violin literature. The book is aptly characterized by its title. It is not a technical or exact historical work, yet touches much on both technical and historical matters. The author discusses the ancestors and relatives of the violin, the rebec, crwth, and vielle, or hurdy-gurdy, and the earlier forms of viols, in an offhand and generally entertaining manner, though not always with precise accuracy. Then she undertakes to tell of the first makers of the violin itself, (strangely omitting all reference to Duiffoprugcar,) tells much of Antonio Stradivari, then of some other Italian makers, and of German, French, and English makers. Various anecdotes, of which the violin has always been a fertile source, are given, of more or less significance.

Among the less known of such stories are several of Tarisio, carpenter, amateur fiddle repairer, and collector, who was one of the first to go into "collecting" on a large scale, and who found many treasures in Italy. He began about the middle of the last century, and went to England in 1851. Charles Reade, who was an impassioned collector of violins and is set down as a connoisseur, knew him well, and has recorded a number of his amusing traits and experiences.

In her description of the construction of the violin are some sensible words about the great varnish question. "The secret of the Cremona varnish," she declares, "lies in the fact that it never was any secret at all." It was not worth anybody's while to write down a recipe that everybody knew, and, the introduction of quick-drying varnishes having killed the Cremonese varnishes, the world awakened to find that it had suffered the grievous loss of a recipe once common property. And, finally, the varnish made and used to-day by some of the best makers is as fine as any varnish that the Amatis or Stradivarius ever made or used. "It is not the Cremona varnish. It has no need to be, for, if anything, it is better."

The last chapters of this strangely contrived little volume are practically treatises on how to keep and how to play the violin. Of course, a few hundred words about the latter far-reaching subject,

THE HUMORISTS.

New Comic Books by American Writers—A Collection of Pictures by John Leech.

THE flood of books fresh from the presses includes many of humorous purpose to which we can give only a passing glance. One of the acknowledged American humorists of the present hour is Judge Henry A. Shute, a Massachusetts jurist who devoted many useful years to the grave pursuits of the law before his innate sense of fun took possession of him. "The Diary of a Real Boy" made such a prodigious hit that sequels were inevitable. Judge Shute, we believe, clings to the fable that Plupy of Exeter, New Hampshire, was a real boy, his very self. In fact, and that the droll diary was discovered in the miscellaneous accumulations of a garret, even as Chatterton discovered the wonderful writings of an imaginary monk among the neglected archives of his native Bristol. Plupy is certainly a buoyant, vital personality, and he wears well.

He makes his reappearance now in a small volume entitled "Letters to Beany and the Love Letters of Plupy Shute," (Boston, the Everett Press.) The letters are of the same extraordinary literary and orthographical quality as the diary and relate to the same sort of boyish joys and sorrows. "Fites" and "frute cake" and "goin' in swiming" are the burden of many of them, when the theme is not small boys' love. As a correspondent, Plupy mingles school-taught formality with the freedom of exuberant childhood. "Yours very respectively" he signs his letters sometimes, even when the missive deals exclusively with a "fite" he had stimulated between two brothers sick with the "chicking pocks," the cause being a dispute as to which had the most "speckles."

A LESS grotesque but equally inspiriting account of the joys and miseries, the diversions and penalties of a small boy's existence in an American country town may be found in "When You Were a Boy," by Edwin L. Sabin, which is graphically and sympathetically illustrated by Frederic Dorr Steele. The various chapters in this have already appeared in The Century Magazine and other periodicals. Mr. Sabin's memories of boyhood are vivid and delightful, and always wholesome, and his humor is occasionally heightened by contrast with a touch of genuine pathos. He writes of the match ball game, the pet dog, the influence of the circus, of fishing and swimming, of running away from home for freedom and revenge, and returning quickly before the folks have missed you. The children's party, the Sunday school picnic, and bob-sled coasting down Middleton's Hill in Winter are among his subjects. His boys are quite as "real" as Judge Shute's and a trifle less coarse. The reflections of a man of mature years run between the lines.

"Peck's Bad Boy" has become a Western American classic. Of humble and obscure origin, he has survived many a fictitious juvenile hero, more artistically conceived, and introduced to the world under more distinguished auspices. He does not grow old, he does not develop intellectually. He is still an imp of mischief. "Peck's Bad Boy and His Pa," "Peck's Uncle Ike," "How Peck Put Down the Rebellion," and the many other Peck books, are now succeeded by "Peck's Bad Boy Abroad," which is copiously and vigorously illustrated. (Chicago: Thompson & Thomas.) The Bad Boy and his "Dad" are now travelers, having said au revoir to the grocery-man. They visit Mount Vernon and the Waldorf-Astoria, cross the Atlantic, encounter King Edward, see things in Paris, climb glaciers, "do" Venice and Naples, hobnob with Sultan and Czar.

CHILDHOOD and youth, it will be seen, are getting a large share of humorous attention this season. Infancy is the theme of Fanny Y. Cory, one of the drollest and cleverest of our humorous artists, who provides the pictures for "Pleasant Tragedies of Childhood," which also contains verses by Burges Johnson. (Harper.) This is an exceedingly attractive picture book, all the illustrations being full-page plates, handsomely executed. They view the perplexities of motherhood (and fatherhood) from a sage infantile standpoint, and reveal an intimate knowledge of nursery politics.

"Motor Goose Rhymes for Motor Ganders" is a little book of nonsense verse engraved on the same pages with grotesque pictures. It may be said of the artist, as Josh Billings once said of Chaucer, that his heart is in the right place, but he cannot "spel." Herman Lee Meader is the name of the author of the jingles, some of which are as poor as the author modestly surmises they may be. "Pal," whoever he is, did the picture work. The Grafton Press publishes the book, and here is a sample of the best it contains:

Little Jack Horner
Would dash 'round a corner,
And never would slow up a bit.
He'd not even warn
With a toot of his horn
The rabbit and dogs that he hit.

"Uncle Bob: His Reflections," by Laura Fitzhugh Preston, is another Grafton Press book. It is made up of contributions to newspapers and periodicals, and is written in approved darky dialect. Uncle Bob is both sage and humorist, with a strong religious tendency.

"Tales of the Road," by Charles N. Crewdson (Chicago, Thompson & Thomas) is a collection of commercial travelers' yarns, full of the modern humor of barter and sale, and something more, for they involve a sort of philosophy of salesmanship. The book is well illustrated.

A NEW collection of the drawings of the inimitable John Leech appears in a neat oblong volume entitled "Pictures of Life and Character." (Putnam.) There is an explanatory preface, treating of Leech's merit as an artist, and the influence he exerted through his famous association with Punch. Some of the pictures are of Leech's very best, and, of course, each carries its little legend and tells its own story. The humors of sporting life, the appetite of British schoolboys, the foibles of womankind, the terrors of the Channel crossing, the perils of horseback riding, the joys of domesticity, are among the subjects so happily treated by this student of humanity from the comic point of view. Here are many drawings long since famous, including that of the infant who discovers that the world is hollow and her doll stuffed with sawdust, and that of the small Briton who will "arise as one man" in case of a French invasion. Briggs, the amateur sportsman, reappears in all his original glory. Not only are the best of Leech's Punch pictures reproduced, but there are some of his capital "Handley Cross" illustrations, too, and a few from other books.

BABYHOOD OF WILD FOLK.

WILDERNESS BABIES. By Julia Augusta Schwartz. Illustrated. Pp. 234. 12mo. Cloth. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. $1.50.

IT is a relief to turn from the long-drawn-out, complicated, and usually tragic lives of animals as portrayed by so many modern nature-writers to these simple tales based upon the generally known bare facts of the babyhood of the wild folk. The stories are too meagre for grown-ups, but should be entirely satisfactory to children, all the more because an emphasis as important as it is true is laid upon the element of play in the lives of these "wilderness babies." It is positively immoral to afflict childhood with such tragedies of bird and beast as have been recorded for its reading, and we gratefully welcome a book written in a different vein.

It is important, however, that a nature-book should truly present nature, and certain slips in verity should be corrected before another edition.

Many birds have feathers when hatched, and the megapodes of mound-builders of Australia hatch full-winged, and are absolutely independent of their parents. (Page, 14.)

The statements that the bear is the most surly, and the wolf the most fierce, of mammals, have no foundation; they are pure fiction. (Page. 20.)

The notion of an opossum putting a wildcat to rout is hardly serious. Why did the opossum family "play 'possum" before the dogs and not before the wildcat? Does instinct in the untaught young creatures include a knowledge of such distinctions? (Page 10.)

The writer is more at home on land than in water, where she is prone to get beyond her depth, as evidenced by the following examples:

Starfish do not "float along." They are only able to crawl slowly over the bottom by means of their myriad sucker feet. Neither can mussels swim about, except pectens, and never "in search of food." They depend upon the currents of water to bring them ailment. (Page 24.)

The figure of the whales, facing Page 36, has the wrong legend; the "strangers" in the drawing being "killers," (Page 39,) and not the herd of whales.

To make the stories quite perfect, it would be well that a naturalist should give them careful revision, so they may teach as well as charm the children, for whom they are written.

Bell's Miniatures.

Two little volumes in Bell's Miniature Series of Great Writers and one in the Painters' Series are being issued by the Macmillan Company. The writers are: "Horace," by the Rev. W. Tuckwell, M. A., author of "Chaucer," in the Ancient Classics section, and "Defoe," by Albinia Wherry, author of "Greek Sculpture with Story and Song," in the Modern Classics section. "Sir Joshua Reynolds, P. R. A.," forms the subject of the other book, which is written by Rowley Cleeve, author of "George Romney."

The books are bound in limp leather and printed linen. Each has a photogravure frontispiece and several half-tone illustrations. Appended to each, too, are a bibliography and a chronological table of the life of the subject and his works.

THE BRONTËS.

Clement Shorter's New Biographical and Critical Volume in the "Literary Lives" Series.

THE "glamour of the Brontës," as Mr. Shorter calls it, is still a potent spell in the literary world. There is something perennially fascinating in the image of the three delicate, rather unhappy country girls suddenly deciding to write and turning out, two of them at least, novels that can still, after half a century, make good a claim to being among the greatest in the language. "Jane Eyre," "Shirley," "Villette," "Wuthering Heights," were, indeed, and still remain, almost inexplicable phenomena, and the tracing of their genesis and the influences that formed their authors into masters of their art is an absorbing pursuit.

Mr. Shorter has done something more than contribute a volume necessary to the completeness of a series. Mrs. Gaskell wrote the authoritative life of Charlotte Brontë, but much new material has been published since she wrote, and that material, as Mr. Shorter points out, has not been gathered into one brief narrative. Nor has it before been subjected to the critical inspection that he gives it in this volume. He is also able to add a little unpublished material. His aim has been more biographical than critical—he is continually disavowing the critical point of view and shutting himself off from criticism. But of course no such biography could dispense with criticism, expressed and implied, and what Mr. Shorter has allowed himself to utter cannot be regarded as among the less important elements of his work.

The story of the Brontës is a simple and distinctly a depressing one. The parochial surroundings in which their father's several incumbencies kept them, the somberness and gloom of their lives, partly, no doubt, the outcome of their temperaments, but increased by the distaste of their experiences as governesses; the tragedy of their brother, Branwell Brontë's wasted life, many of the episodes in the careers of the three girls, make anything but an exhilarating narrative. There can be no doubt, of course, but that these things influenced their intellectual fibre as writers, and so wrought themselves into the pages of their books. There is really little to tell, as a story, of thing to say, and will not agree with Mr. Birrell that "we have no use for this young man." He certainly did have much influence on the life and work of his sisters. But the story is not an enlivening one. The first publications, the experiences with the publishers, the criticism of the three young authors who put forth their writings as the work of Currer, Ellis, and Acton Bell, the various criticisms, many of them amusing now in their ineptitude, the quick popularity that the novels gained, are all matters that have been many times recounted, but they have an ever fresh interest.

The poems of Emily Brontë, the one poet of the family—although Anne wrote poems that have kept their place in the hymnals—Mr. Shorter judges with perhaps more enthusiasm than many will share with him. She was in some respects the most remarkable of the family. Her biographer calls her the Sphinx of modern English literature. She is known by but one novel—"Wuthering Heights"—which Mr. Shorter considers "the greatest book ever written by a woman." All speculation as to the sources of her inspiration he declares to be beside the mark, for it is a book by itself. For Charlotte's originality and power he finds terms equally strong. "Jane Eyre" is "as original a novel as was ever submitted to the judgment of the reading public"—characterized briefly by its intense sincerity; and the estimate of another critic that it contains some of the "most great and simple prose of all this century" is eagerly accepted by this one. "Shirley" is unequal, the first two volumes showing the effects of the strain upon her of her brother's and two sisters' illness and death. "Villette" is "one of the great novels of literature" and had the greatest intensity, the most genuine passion, the most satiric strength, of any novel of its period; and it is the crowning achievement of its writer.

There has been perhaps as much effort to trace the originals of Miss Brontë's characters and places as in the case of any novelist; and Mr. Shorter gives up a good deal of space to this not wholly profitable task. "Biography," he observes, "insists upon identification." We may believe that it is a task more congenial to the biographer than to most of the readers of the novels. There has been some anguish over identifications in Charlotte Brontë's case. Many of them appear perfectly plain, and it is clear that she derived many of her types, if not actual personages, from the people by whom she was surrounded. So, too, many of her scenes and places can be traced in the near-by regions of Yorkshire. Some of the portraits of people are cruel. But genius is frequently cruel, "with a certain ostrich-like quality added," never knowing its cruelty and never anticipating identification, as Mr. Shorter observes.

The task, on the whole, he has per-and Scott, edited by J. H. Sloan; Thomas Carlyle's "Oliver Cromwell," abridged and edited by Edgar Sanderson, M. A., and Agnes Strickland's biography of Queen Elizabeth, edited by Ida A. Taylor. Each book has been abridged, provided with notes, a biography of the author, and an index. The volumes appear in cheap form, (60 cents each,) and in size are thick 12mos, bound in green or red cloth in imitation of lambskin.

BIGGEST OF TRUSTS.

THE GREATEST TRUST IN THE WORLD. By Charles Edward Russell. One volume. Pp. viii.-252. 8vo. Cloth. New York: The Ridgway-Thayer Company.

MR. RUSSELL'S book is made up, apparently with little or no change, of a series of articles published by Everybody's Magazine during the past few months. The greatest trust in the world, according to Mr. Russell, is the so-called Beef Trust; and accepting his figures as correct, it must be owned that he seems to justify his ascription of the title.

Over a year ago Mr. Thomas W. Lawson "of Boston" began to contribute articles on "Frenzied Finance" to the same magazine. After sixteen or seventeen months Mr. Lawson appears to be about as far along in his story, whatever that is, as he was before he began—like the dog that turns around half a dozen times and lies down on the same spot. Mr. Russell, however, a trained newspaper man, dealing with a subject of much greater public interest than the half-maudlin, half-triumphant confessions of Mr. Lawson, has told his story, and told it well. Except in his chapter headings and in his last few chapters he has told it soberly, marshaling his facts and stating his case plainly, and on the whole forcibly.

The author traces the development of this trust from the invention of the private refrigerator car. Each car pays for itself in a little over two years; the railroads haul the cars at lower than the regular rates, and make repairs on them; the "trust" charges several prices for ice, whether ice be used or not. Thus fortified, able to terrify the Presidents of the "great" railroads so that they dared not meet publicly to protest against its demands, the Beef Trust sits, like the Old Man of the Sea, on Sindbad's shoulders, on those of the American public. Mr. Russell tells how it has suppressed competition, and of the ruin that has followed its progress in the grazing States. He membered by readers of the magazines. His "Collected Poems" will shortly be issued by the Revells.

ADVICE TO GIRLS.

THE COUNSELS OF A WORLDLY GODMOTHER. By Persis Mather. Pp. 305. 12mo. Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.50.

NO LESS wise than witty are these "Counsels of a Worldly Godmother," who, by the by, does herself less than justice by her adjective, for there is a potentially wide difference between a worldly woman and a woman of the world, and hers is the distinction of belonging to the latter's small and charming class.

The "counsels" are given in a series of letters dealing with a large range of subjects—grace of manner, the value of ancestors, the rare art of conversation, "charity gone wrong," speaking with tongues, womanliness, "the price of popularity," letters of introduction, "vulgarity rampant," foreign alliances, "the slime of the divorce court," books and reading, marrying a poor man, tactful bearing toward a husband, and all the essentials of a successful social life.

If these letters to a motherless goddaughter have little to do with renouncing the pomps and vanities of this wicked world, at least they will teach a girl how to bear herself most discreetly and gracefully among them, and to have a just sense of their value in the complex scheme of life. Indeed, we are not sure that the godmotherly counsels do not point in the end to a pretty complete renunciation for the sake of a love great enough to rejoice in sacrifice.

The letters have caught just the right tone; they are light in touch, gently ironical, diversified by anecdote, full of sparkling humor, with now and then a serious word which goes straight to the mark all the more surely because of the sunny atmosphere through which it is sped. Now and then we take issue with her as in her somewhat narrow definition of a snob. To our mind a snob is "a vulgar person aping gentility," as Halliwell hath it, both cringeing before those he esteems his betters and bent upon pushing himself among them; incidentally, of course, giving pain by his airs of superiority, but that only a detail of his detestable career.

Mrs. Mather's advice as to the study of languages, seems scarcely practical. How many girls can so master French and Italian as to converse fluently and elegantly in both, observing every shade of meaning? We agree with the author, however, in holding "firmly to reading as a means of intellectual salvation." Reading and association with brilliant men have produced the most fascinating and influential women the world has ever seen, from the earliest French salons to HOLLAND.

A Book of Rambles and Miscellaneous Bataviana by E. V. Lucas.*

WHEN it is said that Mr. Lucas has made his Dutch towns and canals as charming as he did the highways and byways of English Sussex, everything has been said which need be said in praise of this new book of his. Rambling over Holland as fancy leads, he mingles with quaint observations of the country and people as they now are a whimsical miscellany of reminiscence—scraps of history—bits about paintings and painters, scholars, soldiers, princes, and other British wanderers among the Dutch—like Goldsmith, say—with quotations from what these others have written in praise and blame. The fact is Mr. Lucas comes near being in his book exactly what one would like a well-informed and companionable fellow-traveler to be if one were seeing Holland with one's own eyes. And the pictures, both Mr. Marshall's water colors and the reproductions of the masters, fit in exactly with the author's humor and are as excellently executed as they are judiciously chosen. These sage general remarks will not serve, however, to give the reader so good an idea of "A Wanderer in Holland" as may be gathered from a few very random passages from the text. Such passages are therefore provided. Here is one very characteristic. The immediate subjects are Dutch barges and canalboats:

> Spring cleaning goes on here, as in the Dutch houses, all the year round, and the domiciliary part of the vessels is spotless. Every bulwark has a washing tray that can be fixed or detached in a moment. "Its a fine day, let us kill something," says the Englishman; "here's an odd moment, let us wash something," says the Dutch vrouw.

In another place Mr. Lucas observes upon the universal Dutch appearance of health, and adds:

> That the Dutch die (nevertheless) there is no doubt, for a funeral is an almost daily object and the aanspreker is continually hurrying by; but where are the dead? The cemeteries are minute and the churches have no churchyards. Of death, however, when he comes the nation is very proud. The mourning customs are severe and enduring. No expense is spared in spreading the interesting tidings. It is for this purpose that the aanspreker flourishes in his importance and pomp. Draped heavily in black from house to house he moves, wherever the slightest ties of personal or business acquaintanceship exist, and announces his news. A lady of Hilversum tells me that she was once formally the recipient of the message, "Please, ma'am, the beker's compliments and he's dead," the time and place of the interment following. The aanspreker was once occasionally assisted by the huilebalk, but I am afraid his day is over. The huilebalk accompanied the aanspreker from house to house and wept on the completion of their sad message. If properly paid, says my informant, real tears coursed down his cheeks; in any case, his presence was a luxury possible only to the rich. The aanspreker is called in also at the other end of life. Assuming a jocund air, he trips from house to house announcing little strangers.

At Rotterdam (of which in general he thinks but meanly) Mr. Lucas praises the zoo and writes particularly of the stork "whose nest is set high on a pinnacle of the buffalo house."

> He was building in the leisurely style of the British workingman. He would negligently descend from the heavens with a stick. This he would lay on the fabric and then carefully perform his toilet, looking round and down all the time to see that every one else was busy. Whenever his eye lighted upon a toddling child or a perambulator it visibly brightened. "My true work!" he seemed to say. "This nest building is a mere bypath of industry."

At Dordrecht, naturally, one traveling in Mr. Lucas's company finds Dumas and "La Tulipe Noire," with good Rosa and envious Boxtel and the brothers De Witt—a more authentic account of whose end is inserted, as well as the story of the "evasion" of the philosopher Grotius, whose wife sent him out of prison concealed, appropriately, in a box of books. At Gorinchem (called Gorcum) the author was much stared at by the inhabitants on account of the headgear of his companion—"one of those comely straw hats trimmed with roses which we call early Victorian and which the hot Summer of 1904 brought in again." To the people of Gorcum the "comely" thing was an offense. "The men whistled, the women sniggered, the girls laughed, the children shouted and ran beside us. The town's aesthetic ideals were honestly outraged, and it took the simplest means of making its protest."

At The Hague the author stopped at a hotel with a tragedy. "For the greatest misfortune that had come upon a hotel keeper had crushed this house. Baedeker had excised their star." Mr. Lucas wondered, as he observed the landlady's grief, "if it were better to have had a star and lost it, or never to have had a star at all."

Coming to Leyden, there is, besides important matters, the kermis and the ceremonial eating of "proffertjes" and "waffeln." "You eat twenty-four proffertjes and two waffeln." These confections are prepared with such celerity that Mr. Lucas, who doesn't seem to know that the waffle is domesticated in many parts of the United States, declares, nevertheless, that the Americans' "quick lunch" has a Dutch origin. They "borrowed celerity in cooking and serving from some Knickerbocker deviser of poffertjes and waffeln in the early days of New York." He wonders that Washington Irving omitted to say as much.

HISTORY OF EDUCATION.

A TEXT BOOK IN THE HISTORY OF EDUCATION. By Paul Monroe, Ph. D., Professor of the History of Education, Teachers College, Columbia University. Illustrations. One volume, Pp. xxiii.-772. 8vo, cloth. New York: The Macmillan Company.

THE study of how to teach—pedagogy, is the technical word used to-day—is very serious. One who aims to become a "teacher of youth" ought to be "called," and speedily to get over any youthful frivolity. It is owing to the intense seriousness of modern teachers that we have so many fads and funny things in education—the suggestion that public school children be taught photography, the giving of "nature lessons," and the insistence that modeling in clay is of more value to the child of the slums than the three Rs. The modern teacher is somewhat like the pupil of Socrates—as described by Aristophanes.

Mr. Paul Monroe of the Teachers College has put forth a very solid book on the history of education. He begins with the barbarian. "Primitive peoples, however diverse they may be in many respects, possess one fundamental bond of similarity. It is that interpretation of their environment which we call animism. Back of every material existence or phenomenal reality a savage posits an immaterial power, a spiritual entity, a 'double' which controls the material object, explains its being and its resistance to the will of man, and makes it an abode of a consciousness no different in kind from the consciousness which he himself possesses." The nature of education among primitive man, according to Mr. Monroe, was determined by this "dominant social characteristic." Mr. Thompson Seton, we think, holds that it was determined by the need of eating and keeping warm.

But we will follow Mr. Monroe. The education of primitive man consisted then in the training necessary to get his food and clothing, and in the procedure necessary to placate the doubles that preside over material things. The training of civilized man is at the basis the same as that of his predecessor. The next step is the development of the priesthood; "the training of the multitude yet consists in indicating the 'What to do' and the 'How to do it,' while in that of the priesthood itself is added the 'Why it should be done.' This inquiry into the meaning of these ceremonials and the attempt at a further interpretation of doctrines beyond that given to the multitude, gives rise to the first real processes of instruction and the first real educational institution."

Having successfully founded that, Mr. Monroe leads us on soberly to China and Greece and Rome. In China education was recapitulation—as it is now in Mohammedan countries; in Greece it was "a progressive adjustment"; in Rome it was practical training. Then we get down to our era, and look at education during the Middle Ages, when Mr. Monroe describes it as a discipline; under the Renaissance came "Humanistic Education"; under the Reformation the religious conception of education was debated; and so, past realistic education, Mr. Monroe brings us down to consider the psychological, the scientific, and the sociological tendencies of education, and the present "eclectic tendency."

Mr. Monroe is modest. In spite of the fact that his book contains nearly 800 pages, he describes it in title and preface as merely a "textbook in the history of education." For the average student of pedagogy, however, we think it will suffice; for the outsider—and persons not devoted to the exploitation of the art of teaching are surely "rank outsiders" nowadays—it may even be too full. It has been prepared with full loyalty to the pedagogic idea, which in its present development is apparently expressed by the words "Study what you teach, never mind whom you teach."

The New York Custom House and its sculptural decorations are to be described by P. T. Farnsworth in the next issue of The International Studio. Other articles in this number will be "E. W. Deming and the Return of the Redman," paintings and etchings of D. Y. Cameron, by Walter Bayes; "Bookbinding in Ireland," by Sir Edward Sullivan, Bart.; some important specimens of the work of the Barbizon School in the Staats Forbes Collection, by E. G. Halton; "The Making of Lace in the State Schools of Austria," by A. S. Levetus, and an easy method of making colored xylographic prints, by Edward Kurtz. But the leading contribution will be a description of the work on copper of Miss Mary Cassatt, by Christian Brinton, and illustrated by reproductions of the artist's studies of children.

MEXICAN BIRDS.

A Capital Book by the Chief Ornithologist of the Bronx Zoological Gardens.*

BIRDS for bird lovers. These two bird lovers found such an immense number and variety of what they sought in Mexico, and what they found is chronicled with such breathless rapidity and detailed fullness, that comparatively little else of Mexico and its inhabitants emerges upon their pages. But as Mexicans are no doubt, in some respects at least, better known than Mexican birds to their neighbors on the north, this record of abundant and keen observations will be very welcome, especially to those who follow the birds and their habits. The number of those who do is continually increasing. They will be interested in the endless stories of searching and finding, of patience rewarded, of bird manners and customs, and anecdotes of bird life that are here given. There are descriptions of many species that are unknown to the north; and to facilitate a close study of what he records, the author has given in an appendix a list of all the birds he met with, with their scientific names and a brief description of their appearance and habits. Mammals were not the chief object of the attention of these travelers, but they saw and observed a good many; and of these there is also a list. The whole story is told with much good humor and with evident enthusiasm.

But the interest of the book is not wholly ornithological. There are some entertaining descriptions of the life the bird seekers lived, the people they met, the adventures they had. They penetrated far into the interior, by the roughest kind of "roughing it," reaching even the Pacific Coast, and traveling fearlessly, a man and his wife, with their camping outfit. They found no enemies, few "bad men"; such as there were they disarmed by kindness, as the supposititious bandit, fairly bristling with revolvers and knives, whose two little children they had fed in their tent. Whereupon his robber's heart was softened, and he helped them in finding certain animals and birds of which they were in search, and in other ways. Then there was an old Aztec and especially the music gives a romantic tinge to the evening existence.

Every native is an innate lover of music. The Spanish melodies of the skilful musicians touch one of the deepest chords in the hearts of the Mexicans and amuse in the usually stolid faces an enjoyment and appreciation which make them seem a different race of people.

There is a useful and detailed chapter on "How We Did It," that gives much excellent advice as to taking this trip far from the beaten paths. Supplies and clothing necessary for a man and a woman—and the woman must be prepared to put up with small discomforts—are enumerated, with the warning that the woman camper in Mexico must be willing to ride cross saddle, though it is not the custom of the country. A revolver is also desirable, though not the usual wear of ladies in Mexico. A Mexican woman will often take a pipe from her mouth to express shock and surprise at a señorita riding cross saddle, and everybody will invariably offer her cigarettes. Camping in Mexico, if it is undertaken in the spirit of these two intrepid travelers, is the pure joy of life, with much to charm and interest and to amuse those with a sense of humor.

*A CAPITAL BOOK IN MEXICO. By Frank M. Chapman, Chief Ornithologist of the Bronx Zoological Gardens. With 32 illustrations in color from drawings by Fuertes, and 32 full-page half-tones from photographs. 8vo. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $3.

MARITAL DISTURBANCES.

THE WORK OF OUR HANDS. By H. A. Mitchell Keays, author of "He That Eateth Bread with Me." Pp. 319. 12mo. Cloth. New York: McClure, Phillips & Co. $1.50.

AS so often happens in present-day fiction, Mrs. Keays's new novel begins where those of an older fashion were wont to leave off—with the marriage of hero and heroine.

Christian Bronsart, the hero, is the son of a plutocrat, who in early life had brought about the financial ruin of John Forsythe, and, as a result, the death of Forsythe's wife. Nevertheless, when the younger Bronsart becomes engaged to Aylmer Forsythe, the elders hide their enmity, and the course of true love runs even more smoothly than is its wont under less inauspicious conditions. The trouble begins when the ideals of the wife, reared by a noble Puritan father, clash with those of the easy-going young husband, whose life of luxury has given him a moral myopia, and whose business ethics have distorted his conscience. Moreover, Aylmer is inspired to a championship of the down-trodden mill employes by Boothroyd, an enthusiastic Socialistic preacher. Naturally, "ructions" follow, in which, we confess, our sneaking sympathies are inclined to go with "the party of the other part," rather than with the coarse denunciation; the unspeakable scene of the ordination; these and other episodes are quite removed from the behavior of normal human beings under like conditions.

The interest and value of the book lie in its revelation of Scottish traits, in its author's appreciation of a noble bedrock of granite character underlying a soil infertile of the flowers of speech. Like Dr. Watson, we think Mr. Knowles would do his best work in a series of sketches unhampered by the intricacies of "the universal passion."

IN MODERN ITALY.

THE PASSPORT. By Richard Bagot. Pp. 417. 12mo. Cloth. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.50.

MR BAGOT has written a pretty love-story of modern Italy, "the little town of Monteflano, nestling among the lower spurs of the Sabine Hills," its setting. Here Donna Bianca Acorari is wooed and won by a young Roman engineer, her inferior in birth. The complications that follow and the outcome of them all shall be left to the author to reveal—as is his right. His heroine is as spirited as she is beautiful, and her stepmother is not the cruel stepdame of folk-lore, but a woman conscientious and kind, though led into wrong paths by two wily villains—her brother and the suave Abbé Roux. Mr. Bagot has depicted these with much skill, and his summing up is excellent. Quoth a priest as good as the Abbé was bad:

> Do you know, Silvio, that I cannot make up my mind as to which is the greater scoundrel of the two, Monsieur le Abbé or Monsieur le Baron. But there can be no question as to which has the better head—Oh, noble art all! The Abbé Roux put all his eggs in one basket; but M. d'Antin divided his with admirable judgment. All the same, with it all, M. d'Antin is a gentleman in his villanies and a man of courage. The Abbé is neither the one nor the other. Moreover, M. d'Antin has a decided sense of humor, and humor, like charity, covers many sins.

Silvio is the young lover, brave and frank as young lovers should be. The story is to be commended, by the bye, for the common sense and honor of its lovers. They do not have those miserable misunderstandings which, more than partings themselves, "press the life from out young hearts," nor do they cherish the creed that romance flings ethics to the winds. They are refreshingly honest, even with particularly unsympathetic elders. The chief character of the novel is, however, Don Agostino, the parish priest of Montefiano—a noble and benignant figure, the sorrows of whose early manhood have been fused into a great tenderness, a large comprehension. He it is who holds "the passport"—the credentials which give him a right to act as the deus ex machina in the little romance that threatens to go all wrong.

pears in Mr. Brander Matthews's book plate, reproduced on Page 99. The legend on it is "Que pensez vous de cette comédie?" and the designer has spelled the third word "uovs!" Surely the misuse of letters can go little further.

JUDGE CHRISTY'S PROVERBS.

PROVERBS, MAXIMS, AND PHRASES of all Ages, Classified Subjectively and Arranged Alphabetically. Compiled by Robert Christy. Two volumes in one. Pp. v.-665; ii.-602. 8vo. Flexible leather. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $2.50.

NEARLY twenty years ago Judge Christy of Washington completed a collection of maxims and proverbs of all ages. He was becomingly modest about his work, so far as his preface went, but the book itself was not quite what it should have been. Now it is republished, two volumes in one, unchanged, except that one cover takes the place of two covers, and that the thin paper fad has reached it. In other words, it is printed on thin paper, and bound in flexible leather. There is justification for thin paper and flexible leather binding; books that one carries in his pocket or handbag may well be made up with them. But there is no justification for their employment in the case of a seldom-used reference book.

As a fact, Judge Christy's collection is what a bibliographer or art curator would call a "tentative list" of proverbs. In spite of the vulgar proverbs that Ray recorded in his famous collection, that list will remain the standard treasury of English adages for years to come. Judge Ray's expurgated collection does not compare with it. The latter compiler has left out dozens of well-established adages and put in many expressions proverbial in appearance, but not yet accepted at their face value. Some of the sayings included by him are no more proverbs, as yet, than are Mr. Dooley's comments on current events, or Mr. Ade's fables in slang. Then the provenance of Mr. Christy's proverbs is not indicated sufficiently, as a rule. Of course, one does not look for the chapter and verse of a real proverb, but where a remark is erected into a proverb by the grace of a compiler, something more definite than "Shaks" or "Dr. Johnson" might be expected. Judge Christy groups his proverbs under many heads. Under the caption "Exertion" we find this: "Roast pigeons don't fly through the air." There are similar infelicities of classification to be noticed. The collection needs a careful revision, and is worth it even as it stands; it contains the material for a good treasury of proverbial sayings.

FRENCH HOME LIFE.

An Interesting Account of the Charming France That the Tourist Does Not See.*

MISS BETHAM-EDWARDS has produced an extremely interesting, and in many ways valuable, book. It contains information about France merely suggested by Mrs. Sartoris's once-famous "Week in a French Country House," and by the anonymous child's story, "A French Country Family"; intimate information such as few if any other Englishwomen are capable of giving. We think, however, that it is actually a slightly revised edition of the author's "France of To-day," for some of it was certainly written before the law of associations banished convents from France; there are half a dozen references to "les bonnes soeurs," convent schools, and institutions no longer existing in the republic, and some figures referring to expenses of keeping house are dated 1894. In other places, however, the book is quite up to date—for example, a reference is made to the 1904 edition of "Nos Deputés," a book which corresponds to our "Congressional Directory."

These criticisms do not impugn the interest of the book. Despite the familiar English wail of superiority that there is no word for "home" in French, Miss Edwards has dared to call her volume "Home Life in France"; and she makes out a very good case for doing so. Her chapters are chiefly unconnected studies of certain elements in French life, but are so numerous that she covers very nearly the whole routine of existence in France. From a first chapter on social usages she takes us housekeeping and holiday making, and then in a series of chapters takes up the family, beginning with the appropriately named "Monsieur (or Mam'sell) the Baby," and leading us down to marriage or old maidhood and bachelordom. Then she describes various isolated elements in French life, characters that appear in many books about France, such as the curé, the juge de paix, the French officer; tells of the family council and the part it plays in French life, and winds up with a chapter on the entente cordiale which she thinks is growing between England and its nearest neighbor.

In so many chapters, Miss Edwards is able to throw new light on many French traits and characteristics. Her thumbnail sketches of French homes are almost microscopic.

> It has ever been a marvel to me that our sisters over the water have their bonnets straight and their coiffure irreproachable. A French sleeping apartment abounds in reflectors, never by any chance can you see yourself properly. * * * In a French house no prevailing savor of fried bacon between 8 and 9 o'clock announces the family breakfast; your coffee and rolls are served while you still luxuriate oo your pillows. * * * The next experience of a French household is its extreme animation—with apologies to my friends, I will say noisiness. No sooner are the shutters thrown open in France than a dozen sounds announce the resumption of work, the return to daily tasks. * * * French ladies, be it recalled by the way, never smoke. The habit is entirely left to the Bohemian and the unclassed. The early dejeuner hastens on the hour of calls. Visits, alike ceremonial and friendly, are generally made between 1 and 2 o'clock. * * * A minor matter shows the hold of tradition on French etiquette. It strikes us oddly to receive a letter signed "Very affectionately yours, Countess of R—," or "Yours sincerely, Marquis of X," but the usage is historic. Thus, great ladies and gentlemen of the seventeenth century signed themselves when writing to friends.

Miss Edwards's chapter on housekeeping is detailed. Defying the usual belief that living is much cheaper in France than in England, she insists that it costs much more; the National genius for economy and cooking enables people to live on less than in England. Everything is taxed in France; "from a postage stamp upward—there are neither penny stamps nor half-penny postcards in France—we may safely aseume that every commodity costs a third mors on the other side of the Chanoel."

> The French officer of to-day is "an indefatigable worker, one to whom fireside joys and intellectual pleasures are especially dear, to whom self-abnegation in the loftiest as well as the domestic seose becomes a second nature. I should say that in no [other] class shins more pre-eminently the virtues of forethought and disinterestedness. * * * Indebtedness is impossible to a French officer. Should debts remain unpaid, the offender is suspended for three years. * * * Many superior officers never dream of taking a holiday, nnd with the constantly widening area nf military science more arduous become their duties and more absorbing their pursuits."

Chapters on the Country Doctor, and the Protestant Pastor are unusual in books descriptive of France, where the Curé is posed almost to weariness ordinarily; the same may be said of one on the Juge de Paix, the subject of which is often enough dragged into stories with little regard to his real occupations.

The juge de paix is a Magistrate charged with very varied and delicate duties. He was thus named because his "work is in a great measure was to conciliate, to prevent lawsuits by advice and impartial intervention. His especial function is intermediary and preventive rather than judiciary. Disputes are always settled by friendly arbitration when possible. * * * One perpetual surprise in France is the prevailing intellectuality, the general atmosphere of culture. These small officials are not only skilled in law and jurisprudence, but often possess considerable literary and artistic tastes. * * * Of the many juges de paix I have known only one or two kept servants. Absence of pretence characterizes colonial life. A rural Magistrate is not looked down on because his wife happens to be her own cook, housemaid, and nurse.

From cover to cover the book is full of quotable bits, and within the slight reservation we made at first is in every way to be approved. It is good to dip into; it is better to read carefully as a means of understanding better than heretofore a people to whom the world owes the greater part of its refinement.

LACE.

MARY SHARP points out in her opening chapter to "Point and Pillow Lace," (Dutton) that lace, like music, belongs essentially to modern times, and she believes that the oldest lace now in existence cannot date back further than 300 years ago, while lace that can be used as an article for dress cannot be older than 200 years.

The chief centres of needle lace-making were Venice, Brussels, and Alençon; while most of the so-called Spanish point originated from Venice, and the Greek lace—a cut work of geometrical design—was also probably Italian. While pillow laces were made, during different periods, all over Europe, nowhere else did they attain to such beauty as in Flanders, where it is believed the art of lace-making was invented. Mrs. Sharp has chapters on Italian needle and pillow laces, French, Flemish, English, and Irish laces, made by hand and the machine. The closing chapter is a summary, and includes briefly-stated facts about laces. A glossary of technical and French, Flemish, Italian, and other foreign terms has been inserted.

There are many pictures in the book showing the different styles of laces. The frontispiece is a photogravure portrait of the Princess Eleanora of Mantua, from the painting in the Pitti Palace at Florence, showing the collar of point lace which also adorns the cuffs of the bodice.

IN AN AIRSHIP.

EDENINDIA (Dillingham) is a word of obvious derivation, and serves as the title of a book about an undiscovered Arcadia. The author is J. P. Armour, and his imagination, if bold, is rather heavy and lumbering in its gait. The story is one of a young man, who, after being jilted by a heartless fiancée because he was no longer rich, went to sleep in a balloon which a breeze-loving relative kept tethered on his front lawn. The ropes broke and a tempest bore the sleeper far over seas to a place unknown to geographers and imperialists—a place called Edenindia. There the young man was found in the King's garden, became an officer of State, and met the King's daughter. Thus the author has an opportunity to enlarge upon the imaginary institutions and customs of his imaginary country, and to tell how on the strength of the book of lyrics in his pocket the hero won in Edsnindia the name of a wonderful poet. There are further adventures in the airship, and a triumphant return to America with a royal wife and a ducal title.

RAFFLES.

FURTHER adventures of the celebrated A. J. Raffles, cricketer and cracksman, are published in a new volume called "A Thief in the Night," (Scribner's.) The chief of these adventures profess to deal with the younger days of Mr. Hornnng's hero, and one in particular tells how Raffles lost Bunny the heart and hand of the girl who loved him. The two of them broke into the house where the girl lived. She was prowling about in a ball gown—and Bunny was recognized. Other tales concern a chest of family silver which was taken to a bank on the top of a cab—with Raffles inside the chest—a meeting of the Criminologists' Club at which a noble Duke and Raffles, with Bunny, assisted, and the lifting of the jewelled belt and other trophies of a champion pugilist. The newer stories, while they seem somehow to lack the snap and go of the earlier ones, are nevertheless not very different in quality, and if you are not tired of the old Raffles they may be trusted to furnish entertainment for an idle hour.

Bird Portraits.

Eight birds were painted by Bruce Horsfall for Mr. Scott's "Portfolio of Bird Portraits," and the pictures, which have been reproduced in the exact colors of the originals, will, therefore, show the catbird, robin, meadow lark, bluebird, woodthrush, brown thrasher, bobolink, and starling as they are in life. McClurg, Phillips & Co. publish the book.

RUSSIAN DISCONTENT.

History of the Revolutionary Movement in the Czar's Dominions by One Who Sympathizes with the Revolutionists.*

THIS history of the agitation in Russia against the despotism of the autocracy and the bureaucracy was originally written to enlighten public opinion in a part of the Czar's dominions, Finland, where, in the main, only loyalty to his dynasty had been expressed, until he ruthlessly and foolishly broke his promise to rule the grand duchy according to its Constitution. The Finnish Opposition, called into being by the Czar's treachery, began to advocate an alliance with the revolutionary elements in Russia, which up till that time had been regarded by the naturally conservative Finns with horror; and began a campaign of education to show the people what is the cause for which the Russian revolutionists contend. This work was a part of this educational literature. In the form in which it now appears, however, Finland is no more referred to than any other part of the Russian Empire. The author's purpose is to sketch for English-speaking readers the history of the long struggle against despotism which he believes has at last brought victory within sight.

When Peter the Great began those reforms from above which were to transform Russia from an Oriental into a European and civilized State, he unwittingly set in motion a train of events which could logically result only in the ultimate destruction of despotism. Neither he nor his successors saw that Russia could not be reformed on its economic and industrial side without being at the same time reformed on its political and governmental side; and the reader of this book will probably be inclined to believe that the failure to grasp this simple proposition is the most disastrous that the much-blundering Romanoffs have ever made. Mr. Zilliacus describes briefly the beginnings of Russian liberalism, which was imported into Russia when the armies that had fought Napoleon returned from their long sojourn in Western Europe. Nicholas I. suppressed all manifestations of discontent with relentless cruelty, but the revolutionary spirit he could not gag. "Despotism," says Mr. Zilliacus, "begat opposition, and the violence used against opponents in speech only brought to maturity the feeling that a system of government which permitted such arbitrary action was essentially bad." In other words, Nicholas began the policy of sitting upon the safety valve which his successors have in the main consistently over, appear as unintentionally as they were brutal. He did as much as one man could do to undermine the Government he was trying to uphold.

The last great historical events touched upon by Mr. Zilliacus are the meeting of the Zemstvo Congress, which Von Plehve's successor, the liberal Sviatopolk-Mirski had allowed to convene, and the demonstration of the workingmen, led by Father Gapon, on the 22d of January, 1905. To the demands of the congress, the importance of which Nicholas probably wholly failed to grasp, he turned a deaf ear, again showing how completely servile he was to the reactionaries. His behavior toward the workers' demonstration and petition showed that he could no longer pose as the loving father of his subjects. "He left his palace in haste, almost like a thief in the middle of the night," leaving his Uncle Vladimir to deal with the people. Vladimir dealt with them so effectually that nearly 3,000 men, women, and children lay dead or dying in the streets of St. Petersburg because they had come unarmed to hand in petition to the Czar.

Mr. Zilliacus does not pretend to be unbiased. He frankly sympathizes with the revolutionists. But his general statements are abundantly supported by specific facts. He has done what he set out to do, what indeed it was not hard to do—he has written a terrible indictment against the bureaucratic despotism called the Russian Government. He believes that the time has gone by when Nicholas can decide whether he will grant a constitution. The people will decide, and they will also decide whether he will continue to reign as constitutional monarch or not. "All those who have attentively followed the development of events in Russia can no longer remain in doubt that as the autocratic Czar he has been condemned to be Nicholas the Last."

NORMANS OF TO-DAY.

MISS G. E. MITTON'S book on "Normandy," for which Nico Jungman has made forty colored pictures, is at last being sent out by the Macmillan Company. She has endeavored, she writes in her preliminary chapter, to write of those towns and sights that are of most interest to the traveler who does not go through Normandy with guidebook in hand. On her way from town to town she stops to examine a native's dress, her or his way of talking, the customs, &c.

Among the cities described are Rouen, Caen, Falaise, Bayeux, Cótentin, Dieppe, and several smaller ones. There are also a couple of chapters on "The Norman Dukes" and "The Mighty William," and the final chapter is about a sail "Up the Seine."

JUSTINIAN.

IN the preface to the first volume of his history of the sixth century A. D., "The Age of Justinian and Theodora," which the Macmillan Company publishes here, William Gordon Holmes sets forth his reason for its publication:

> Although the age of Justinian is the most interesting and important in the whole series of the Byzantine annals, no comprehensive work has hitherto been devoted to the subject. The valuable and erudite "Vita Justiniani" of Ludewig is more of a law book than of a biography, and less of a circumstantial history than of either. The somewhat strange medley published by Isambert under the title "Vie de Justinien" is scarcely a complete chronology of the events, and might be called a manual of the sources rather than a history of the times. Excellent accounts, however, of Justinian are to be found in some general histories of the Byzantine Empire as well as in several biographical dictionaries * * * but any student of the period would decide that it deserves to be treated at much greater length than has been devoted to it in any of these books. In the present work, the design has been to place before the reader not only a record of events, but a presentment of the people among whom and of the stage upon which those events occurred. I have also attempted to correlate the aspects of the ancient and the modern world in relation to science and progress.

In subsequent volumes the author will treat of the Persian wars, Carthage under the Romans, the building of St. Sophia, Rome in the sixth century, the religion of the period, Roman law, literature and art, Justinian's last days, &c. Full notes have been inserted at the bottom of the pages.

ENGLISH LITERATURE.

THE second part, in two volumes, of the series of Handbooks of English Literature, edited by Prof. Halea, deals with "The Age of Transition, 1400-1580," and is by F. J. Snell, M. A., author of "The Age of Chaucer," also in this series. Mr. Soell has tried to present a clear account of English and Scottish literature during the period that intervenes between Chaucer and Spenser, and, in order that the reader may derive "distinct and tangible impressions," he has paid special attention to the grouping of the various matters. He writes in his introduction (in the second volume) of the times:

> The period that now concerns us has its simple group of virtues, a great theme or interest, say, for example, charged with pain and pleasure and filled [illegible] of strongly contrasted sunlight. * * * Always on the alert for any natural change of atmosphere or weather, he has produced skillful reflections of calm and storm, of wind and rain, of frost and snow. Few landscape painters have gone in for so many and varied effects.

> It is said at last the final narrative in a new [illegible] are strangely contrasting with the mediaeval. * * * No doubt this period was very imperfectly, or scarcely at all, conscious of the illimitable changes through which it was passing.

Volume I. is given over to the poets of the period, and the second book to the dramatists and prose writers. They appear in small, convenient form for the pocket, and in cloth binding, with the imprint of the Macmillan Company.

Pindar and Bacchylides.

Bacchylides has, of course, no pretension to be poet of the same order as Pindar; it might rather be said that part of the interest which he possesses for us arises from the marked difference of poetical rank. In reading his odes, so elegant, so transparently clear, so pleasing in their graceful flow of narrative, often so bright in their descriptive touches, and at moments so pathetic, we feel that this is a singer who, moving in a lower sphere than Pindar, must also have been more immediately intelligible to the common Hellenic sense. The great Theban master makes no concealment of a haughty consciousness that his inmost appeal is to the few. This Ionian, if once he likens himself to an eagle * * * is truer to his own spirit when he describes himself as "the nightingale of Ceos."

At the outset of his preface Prof. Sir Richard C. Jebb speaks thus of Bacchylides, whose poems and fragments on the papyrus in the British Museum were brought from Egypt in 1896, and are now considered by him in the volume published by the Macmillan Company. He has written a long introduction, provided notes, and made the English prose translations of the Greek originals. In compiling the volume, Prof. Jebb writes in his preface:

> I have endeavored to combine criticism and interpretation with a treatment of the poems as literature, and thus to contribute, though it be only a little, toward obtaining for them that place in our Greek studies which they appear well fitted to hold. For such a purpose it was not enough to explain and illustrate the odes themselves; it was necessary also to aim at conserving some idea of the surroundings amidst which the poet worked, of his relation to contemporaries, and of his place in the historical development of the Greek lyric.

Three autotype plates in the book present fac similes of parts of the papyrus in consideration.

The Medical Directory.

Volume VII. of the Medical Directory of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut is quite up to the standard set by its editors in the past. It contains, primarily, lists of practicing physicians and surgeons in each of the States named, arranged by towns and then alphabetically; lists of retired physicians and surgeons, and next the necrology of each State. Then come lists of hospitals and benevolent institutions, recent laws of each State affecting the medical professions, lists of BOSTON NOTES.

Col. Higginson's Book—Some Interesting Illustrations—New Juveniles.

In spite of its previous appearance in The Atlantic Monthly, Col. Higginson's "Part of a Man's Life" will be found to have many new attractions, for it contains full-sized reproductions of letters from Everett, Arnold, Phillips, Edward FitzGerald, Victor Hugo, Sainte-Beuve, Darwin, Froude, Browning, and other friends of the author, and also a portrait of Waring in the days when he rode Vix and Ruby, and a picture of the hapless Una Hawthorne.

The late Lafcadio Hearn's "The Romance of the Milky Way" gives the reader much that is new, and above all lays before him a theory of literary composition and a revelation of Hearn's practice that should be a joy and a stimulus to every wielder of a pen, however humble. Some day this volume is to be followed by a book of familiar letters.

"In the March and Borderland of Wales," the newest announcement of Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., describes a country much visited, but hitherto not made the subject of much writing, and its 150 illustrations from sketches by Mr. W. M. Meredith, George Meredith's son, are unhackneyed in subject. Mr. Bradley will be remembered as the author of "Highways and Byways of North Wales" and "Highways and Byways in the Lake District."

Mr. Henry Holt's paper in the November Atlantic is agreeably remarkable in its manner of taking Mr. G. B. Shaw, who strikes the average American dumb with wrath, whereas Mr. Holt accepts him as providentially appointed material for jokes, and proceeds to make them.

Saturday of next week will bring Mr. E. Boyd Smith's "Noah's Ark," in which the text is almost as good as the pictures. Who before Mr. Smith ever perceived that when the animals left the Ark they vowed that never again would they go anywhere in a ship? With "Noah's Ark" are come Mr. Edwin Mims's "Sidney Lanier," Miss Eva Tappan's "The Golden Goose," Mr. Irving B. Richman's "Rhode Island 1636-1905," Miss Proctor's "Songs of America," Mr. Curtis Hidden Page's "Chief American Poets," Gen. Morris Schaff's "Etoa and Kirkersville," a study of two Iowa towns, and an account of the national road.

There are to be new editions of Miss Josephine Preston Peabody's "Marlowe" and Mr. Aldrich's "Judith of Bethulia," containing the changes found necessary when the plays were presented, and the curious in those matters will like to compare these issues and the first.

Mr. Charles Clark Munn's "Chip, a Waif of the Wilderness," announced by Messrs. Lothrop, Lee & Shepard, will appear as "The Girl from Tims Place," and neither its place nor its heroine will be fictitious. "Tims Place" was in the northern wilderness of Maine, to which Mr. Munn goes in the hunting season, and the girl was employed by its owner, who compelled her to work barefooted and gave her only the cast-off clothing of men to wear. The story of her escape and after life compose the book.

The prospects of the "Little Colonel" books for the season are rather amazing, considering that they are romantically religious and even sentimental, without a touch of athletics, or any of the other things supposed to be the sole interest of the modern girl. Briefly, the first edition of "The Little Colonel's Christmas Vacation" included as many volumes as all the editions for the "Little Colonel" book of 1904, and new editions of all Mrs. Johnston's other works will be necessary. The next books to be issued by Messrs. L. C. Page & Co. will be the two large volumes of Col. Charles Denby's China with its original photographs reproduced in duogravure. Col. Denby was American Minister from 1885 until 1898, and his son, who has written some chapters of the book and annotated the others when necessary, was in Tientsin during the siege, of which he furnishes an account. Col. Denby's son has been appointed Chief Clerk of the Department of State, and will enter upon his duties Nov. 15, replacing Col. Michael, made Consul at Calcutta.

Miss Mary Knight Potter's "The Art of the Venice Academy," the last of the "Art Galleries of Europe Series" to be issued by Messrs. L. C. Page & Co. this Winter, is uncommonly fortunate in its pictures, for the author has chosen many which are not commonly used as illustrations and many of the reproductions are so good as to bear observation with a magnifying glass.

Mr. John C. Reed's "The Brothers' War," to be published early next month by Messrs. Little, Brown & Co., is a remarkable book to appear in Boston, once the abolitionist headquarters, for its author's sympathies are Southern, although he is as willing to concede conscientious honesty to the North as he is to assert it for the South.

The American Unitarian Association will soon make a valuable contribution to the discussion of negro education in a volume describing six of the leading Southern institutions. The title of this work is not yet chosen, but Howard University will be described by Prof. Kelly Miller, Fisk University by President James G. Merrill, Atlanta University by Prof. W. E. B. Du Bois, Hampton Institute by President H. B. Frissell, Tuskegee Institute by Prof. Roscoe Conkling Bruce, and Berea College by President William G. Frost.

The Association will continue its "True American Types" with "Augustus Conant," by Mr. Robert Colyer. Conant was a New England pioneer in Illinois, where he entered the ministry, enlisting during the civil war and dying a soldier. Another volume of biography more varied in character will be called "Daughters of the Puritans," and is written by Mr. Seth Curtis Beach. The subjects are Catherine Maria Sedgwick, teacher, novelist, writer of moral tales and of travels; Mary Lovell Ware, who long before the day of Florence Nightingale showed what good nursing may do; Lydia Maria Child, the really self-sacrificing abolitionist, content to be shabby and old-fashioned for "the cause"; Dorothea Lynde Dix, Sarah Margaret Fuller d'Ossoli, Harriet Beecher Stowe, and Louisa May Alcott.

The association has three English books in preparation: "James Martineau, Theologian and Teacher," by the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter, Case Lecturer in Manchester College, Oxford; "Agnosticism and Theism in the Nineteenth Century," by Mr. Richard A. Armstrong, and "Eutychus and His Relations," by the late Rev. Brooke Hereford. The last book is written in the character of a layman, and was published anonymously during the early years of its author's ministry

Miss Edith Francis Foster has assured herself of having the proper pictures for her "Mary 'n' Mary" by drawing the cover design, the three full-page illustrations, and the small pictures in the text so that the reader will never see the fair-haired little rich girl when he should look upon the dark locks and spirited little face of her poor playmate. Two novelties, Mike, a Jersey heifer, joint pet of the two heroines, and the militia ambulance corps observing its field day, are here brought into juvenile fiction, and the militiaman is evidently to be the hero of the next book, for "Mary 'n' Mary" is to have a sequel.

This story is to be published by Messrs. Dana Estes & Co., and on their list is another story in which a poor girl who makes her way upward is the heroine of Miss Harriet A. Cheever's "Josie Bean, Flat Street." Josie is a milliner's errand girl in the beginning, and, although her first opportunity comes to her from her inherited artistic taste, her faithfulness and obedience are really the chief agencies in bringing her success to pass.

"The Dorrance Domain," Miss Carolyn Wells's novel, to be published in November by the W. A. Wilde Company, is a Stocktonian tale of a tumultuous family of girls and boys, far too lively to be welcome guests in a boarding house, and of their success when they turned their overflowing energy to account in keeping a hotel, owned by their grandmother and guardian.

Miss Wells's story is illustrated by five pictures by Mr. William F. Stecher, and so is Miss Nina Rhoades's "That Preston Girl," a tale in which inevitable disaster seems to follow the heroine, but is transformed into good fortune in the twinkling of an eye, making it the kind of romance to please a healthy-minded girl too young to care for problem novels, but old enough to love a love story.

Another book to be published by the same company is Miss Amy Blanchard's "A Frontier Knight," in which the heroine, half in play, sends her lover to search for her sister's betrothed, who vanishes from his Texan home on the very day of his sweetheart's arrival from Kentucky, and leaves no trace to show whether he has been captured by Apaches, kidnapped by Mexicans, or abducted by lawless Americans.

THE APPROACH OF CHRISTMAS

Do you want a good book for the growing home library? Do you want a real, human book for the table beside your bed? Do you wish a book that carries a message, to send as a gift to a friend? Then read what we have to say about these four books:

First—The story—The marriage of a poor girl with high ideals into a rich family of lower standards whose wealth is made by the work of large numbers of operatives. Back Home

By Eugene Wood. Illustrated by A. B. Frost. Cloth, 12mo. $1.50.

We all look back to boyhood when we went barefoot, spoke pieces Friday afternoon, went in swimming without permission, attended Sunday school because we had to, and the Sunday school picnic because we wanted to. Therefore, we all find in this quaint, homely book our early boyhood life told as we always remembered it. It has the one touch of nature that makes us all akin.

The Fortunes of The Landrays

By Vaughan Kester. Five illustrations by The Kinneys. Cloth, 12mo, $1.50.

This is a story of the great West. It begins with the gold fever of '49, and describes emigrant trains, prairie schooners, Indian massacres and other stirring scenes, all held together by the family life of the Landrays, and the work, play, adventures and loves of the people composing this family. It is the story of the lives of our own immediate ancestors and an account of the making of the United States.

The Ancient Landmark

By Elizabeth Cherry Waltz. Cloth, 12mo, $1.50.

Imagine a young, beautiful and sensitive woman irrevocably married to a drug fiend. She believes that nothing can justify divorce, and her friends and the social circle to which she belongs agree with her. The entire book is occupied in telling how she gradually came to believe in her right to her own life, in which she was helped by a real love for a man whom she could also respect. The background of the story is laid in Kentucky, and it is a beautiful picture of the famous blue-grass country

SAMANTHA'S

NEW BOOK

Around the World With Josiah Allen's Wife

By Marietta Holley.

"Those who have enjoyed the discursive descriptions of Samantha's experiences at the great expositions, and under other and varied circumstances, will without doubt also enjoy this new book, 'Around the World with Josiah Allen's Wife.'"—New York Tribune.

"There is plenty of the old humor in it, enough to satisfy the old-time devotees, who will persist in having more of the same good thing. LITERARY SECTION OF THE NEW YORK TIMES

NEW YORK, OCTOBER 28, 1905.

TOPICS OF THE WEEK.

It is not as we feared. Pyecroft does not appear in the story. The date is A. D. 2023, and Pyecroft, happily, has been "re-enlarged upon the earth." Capt. Hodgson and Capt. Purnall, who command the night mail from the London General Post Office tower in London to Quebec, one gusty Winter night, through atmospheric disturbances only a poet could imagine and only an inspired student of meteorology and modern engineering could describe, are both "re-enlarged," highly developed Pyecrofts, men of the bright future. And let the quarrelsome malcontents who are forever trying to stay the march of progress with their howls for "peace" take notice that in the year 2023 war is to be a thing of the past. Truly, Mr. Kipling's story in the November McClure's is a wonderful story, a work of genius, representing, perhaps, his greatest imaginative flight. Do not try to read it with a dictionary of technical terms at hand. Do not try vainly to measure and weigh all its statements. Let your own imagination be guided solely by that of the poet's, for poet Kipling is, once more, in this tale. Do not, we beg of you, try to comprehend the Fleury ray, Magniac's bow rudder, or Castelli's "gull-wing curve." They are there vividly The question of the mixed authorship he handles boldly, and few will question his judgment that the genius of Marlowe shines strongly throughout the trilogy and that Shakespeare corrected and adapted and rewrote. Peele and Greene almost certainly had a hand in the authorship.

THE death of José Maria de Heredia, the sonneteer, whose literary fame rests on one volume of perfect verse, has left a vacant chair in the French Academy. A movement has already been vigorously set on foot in Paris to secure the honor for Catulle Mendes, and this, in its turn, has caused a little outbreak, even in the French capital, of what Mr. Bernard Shaw calls "Comstockery." There are actually men of letters in France who object to indecent literature, and Mendes, brilliant as he is, has often seemed to be pursuing dirt for dirt's sake. To be sure, he is a real poet, and he has many stanch adherents. Mendes is now about 64 years old. He has published much, and his prose is considered inferior to his polished verse. He was once the husband of Judith Gautier.

IN the "Handy Volume Classics" (Crowell) we have "Selections from the Writings of Benjamin Franklin," edited by U. Waldo Cutler. The editor is at pains to tell us in his introduction that Benjamin Franklin shared "the highest honors in English literature of the eighteenth century" with Samuel Johnson and Jonathan Edwards. He has two pages or more devoted to the "contrasts" and "likenessee" in the careers of these three. Of course this sort of thing is worse than useless, and poor stuff to put in the hands of young students. But the selections in the book are well chosen. There are passages from "Poor Richard's Almanack" to begin with; some of Franklin's newspaper contributions, passages from his correspondence and state papers. Another volume in the same series contains "One Hundred Best American Poems," selected by John R. Howard, which is a tasteful and useful compila- reviewed last week. Mr. de Selincourt ranks two of the Brontës, Charlotte and Emily, with Dickens and Thackeray among the novelists of the mid-Victorian era. He accords the sisters this high honor, and assumes that the rest of us have done so, because of "the passionate intensity with which the writers recalled their inner experience." Their work, he declared, had "an essentially lyrical quality." A poetic atmosphere "brooded" over their novels. We fear this is "academic" criticism, and will never reach the mind of the multitude. The absurdity of some of the details in Charlotte's novels, especially in "Jane Eyre," he contended, was redeemed by their essential truth. This is clearer and more comprehensible. She had inborn knowledge of the human soul, but knew too little of manners and customs. But the consideration of Charlotte Brontë's genius, it seems, must still provoke rhapsodical language and cryptic comparisons.

A WORLD WITHOUT A CHILD," by Conison Kernahan, (Revell,) is a tract written in a somewhat inflated and artificial manner, and dealing with the theme which President Roosevelt has placed prominently for public consideration. We have no objection whatever to grave discussion of this subject, but the reading of a few pages suffices to show that Coulson Kernahan, though he may be perfectly sincere, has pitched his song of woe in a false key. He is intensely religious, and his book may please folks who like to have religion treated of in a showy, spectacular way.

WALTER C. BRONSON of Brown University has selected and edited a new book of "English Essays" (Henry Holt.) It is intended as an introductory course in literature for colleges, but it will be of use to anybody who desires to have on his bookshelves a good selection of English essays from Bacon to Stevenson. Milton, Browne, Dryden, Steele, Addison, Swift, Defoe, Johnson, Goldsmith, Burke, Hazlitt, Lamb, Lander, De Quincey, Macaulay, Thackeray, Ruskin, Newman, Arnold, Pater, Huxley—all are represented, some whose works are LITERARY CRITICISM.

MR. PAUL ELMER MORE'S first two collections of critical essays marked him out as a literary critic of originality and discernment, a writer of style with an admirable equipment of learning. This third volume ("Shelburne Essays: Third Series," Putnam,) will enhance that reputation, and it will be agreeable and stimulating reading to those who enjoy real literary criticism in the higher sense. There is something far-reaching in his views, something that goes beyond the immediate fashion of the hour. He is sound and sane, and he can penetrate sympathetically to inner realities of the works and the men he is studying. He is independent and he thinks for himself.

Cowper's correspondence, Whittier the Poet, Saint-Beuve, "Scotch Novels and Scotch History," Swinburne, Christina Rossetti, Browning's popularity, Byron's "Don Juan," Laurence Sterne, and Mr. Shorthouse are the subjects on which he writes. "The line of least resistance," he observes in his essay on Whittier, "is what many critics have followed, without taking the trouble to form an independent opinion; and the line of least resistance has a miserable trick of leading us astray." He is writing especially concerning Whittier's "Pennsylvania Pilgrim," a beautiful idyl that he considers quite the most characteristic of his works.

Whittier himself thought it perhaps the best of them; "better than 'Snowbound,' but nobody will find it out." The analysis of the sources of Whittier's strength and weakness in that essay is admirable in its candor and impartiality.

It is a far cry from the provincial poet of New England to the brilliant cosmopolitanism of Sainte-Beuve; but here is a theme which he treats with the same knowledge and the same kind of discriminating judgment. Toward the subtle drawing of distinctions the bent of Sainte-Beuve's intellect drew him, and the way his scalpel cut into the work of Hugo and Lamartine, severing what is morbid from what is sound, causes Mr. More to exclaim: "That is criticism."

It is interesting to note Mr. More's remark in closing his essay that the reason why England has never had and may never have a critic comparable to Sainte-

W.

Sir Joshua Reynolds.

A monograph on "Sir Joshua Reynolds, First President of the Royal Academy," by Sir Walter Armstrong, is about to be issued by Charles Scribner's Sons, in conjunction with William Heinemann in London. The author, in his brief note, which follows, describes his attitude toward the painter:

The aim of this book is to give a concise account of Sir Joshua's career, as recorded in his numerous biographies and in the series of his work, and to express opinions on his art and writings. If my estimate of his character is found to differ in essential points from that usually accepted, I can only say that it has been formed after a very careful weighing of the evidence. It is my conviction that from the first it has been the custom to regard Reynolds through an atmosphere of idealization created by enthusiasm for his art. If this monograph possesses any originality, it is that I have endeavored to paint the great artist as a consistent human being, even although the result may be to set him on a plane somewhat different from that chosen by some previous writers.

In one of the additional chapters following the story of Reynolds's career—on his character, his art, and his writings—Sir Walter Armstrong writes:

He appears to me the supreme, if not the only, modern instance of a painter reaching greatness along a path every step of which was trodden deliberately, with a full consciousness of why it was taken and whither it was leading, and with the power unimpaired to turn back or to change the goal at any moment. Superficially, the art of Sir Joshua resembled that of Raphael as little as it well could; mentally, the processes of the two men were curiously alike. Both possessed taste to such a degree that it became genius, and both were endowed, for the service of their taste, with a mental industry which is rare.

The volume is profusely illustrated with photogravura and half-tone reproductions of some of the best known of Reynolds's pictures.

First American Printing Press.

Early next month Dodd, Mead & Co. will publish the second volume of the series on "Famous Presses" that has been inaugurated by the Kirgate Press, the first volume dealing with "Horace Walpole and the Strawberry Hill Press," (1757-1789.) It treats of the Cambridge Press, (1630-1692,) which was established at Cambridge, Mass., by Stephen Daye, and for over a generation was the sole representative in English-America of the art of printing.

Among the contents of the volume is a bibliographical list of the issues of the Cambridge Press. The subject is treated of from a historical as well as a bibliographical point of view. The author, R. F. Roden, describes the work of the Press and its evolution from its establishment to its dissolution.

The illustrations consist of fac similes of the "Daye Press" now in possession of the Vermont Historical Society, title pages, and extracts from old manuscripts, among the last being the order of the General Court, June, 1663, repealing the act of October of the year before, when the liberty of the press was restricted in Cambridge, and two licencers were oppointed. The fac simile is an exact reproduction of the original document, which is possessed by The University Press, Cambridge, Mass.

THE PRESIDENT'S BOOK.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT has dedicated his new book, "Outdoor Pastimes of an American Hunter," which Charles Scribner's Sons are bringing out this week, with numerous illustrations from photographs by members of Mr. Roosevelt's parties at the different hunts, to John Burroughs. He expresses his "hearty appreciation" of Burroughs's "warfare against the sham nature writers"—"the yellow journalists of the woods," as Mr. Burroughs calls them. The President continues:

From the days of Aesop to the days of Reinecke Fuchs, and from the days of Reinecke Fuchs to the present time, there has been a distinct and attractive place in literature for those who write avowed fiction in which the heroes are animals with human or semi-human attributes. This fiction serves a useful purpose in many ways, even in the way of encouraging people to take the right view of outdoor life and outdoor creatures; but it is unpardonable for any observer of nature to write fiction and then publish it as truth, and he who exposes and wars against such action is entitled to respect and support. You in your own person have illustrated what can be done by the lover of nature who has trained himself to keen observation, who describes accurately what is thus observed, and who, finally, possesses the additional gift of writing with charm and interest.

As will be seen, the dedication is in the form of a letter, which the writer addresses to "Dear Oom John." Five of the chapters in the volume are new, while the other half dozen originally appeared in Caspar Whitney's "Deer Family" and other publications. They describe a couger hunt, a Colorado bear hunt, wolf coursing, hunting in the cattle country, a shot at mountain sheep, the white-tail deer, the mule deer or "Rocky Mountain blacktail," the wapiti or round-horned elk. Yellowstone Park, hooks on big game, and "At Home."

In the last chapter the author writes about the home pets, which, at one time, included kangaroo rats, flying squirrels, guinea pigs, a bear, and two or three wild animals. The President writes of horses and horsemanship.

The best among vigorous out-of-door sports should be more than pastimes. Play is good for play's sake, within moderate limits, especially if it is athletic play, and, again within moderate limits, it is good because a healthy body helps toward healthiness of mind.

THE HORSE.

PROF. WILLIAM RIDGEWAY of the University of Cambridge, England, author of "The Origin of Metallic Currency and Weight Standards," "The Early Age of Greece," &c., has compiled a volume on "The Origin and Influence of the Thoroughbred Horse," published by the Macmillan Company. He treats not only of all the chief breeds of British domestic horses known in historical times, but also takes a survey of all the other living equidae, as well as of the ancestors of the genus. He has made an attempt to trace historically the origin of the various colors found in English horses; at the same time indicating the influence exercised on the history of the chief nations of the ancient, mediaeval, and modern world by the possession of horses, especially by the acquisition of what he terms the "Libyan" horse. Besides all this he has "also tried to point out the lessons of supreme importance to the breeder which can be learned from the contemplation of the injury wrought to breeds of great value by the ill-judged and unscientific introduction of alien blood, a practice in no small degree due to a lack of historical knowledge, and to a general belief that all our domestic races of horses, like those of tame pigeons, have been obtained solely by artificial breeding from a single wild species."

A supplementary chapter has been included considering "The Development of Equitation." There are also addenda and a full index, besides numerous illustrations.

Life of Gen. Meade.

The John C. Winston Company of Philadelphia will have ready for publication in a few days a new edition of "The Life of Gen. George Gordon Meade, Commander of the Army of the Potomac," by Richard Meade Bache. In addition to a new preface, the reprint will contain as an appendix a discussion of a long-mooted question, entitled "Grant vs. Meade." The question the biographer discusses is: "Why, in the order of promotion to the rank of Lieutenant General, was Meade, the Commander in Chief at the decisive battle of Gettysburg, and one of the chief agents, if not the leading agent, next to Grant himself, in the crowning Virginia campaign of 1864-5, passed over in favor of Sheridan, a far junior ranking officer?"

ANIMAL AUTOBIOGRAPHIES.

THE "Autobiographies" of "The Cat," by Violet Hunt, and "The Black Bear," by Perry Robinson, in the series of Animal Autobiographies which the Macmillan Company is bringing out in this country, are now appearing. The story of the cat, Loki, has a dozen colored pictures by Adolph Birkenruth, and the same number by Joan Vort embellish the volume on the bear.

The editor of the series, speaking in his preface to "The Cat," says that "Loki is a real cat in more senses than one, and those who follow his life story will find themselves better able to understand their own cats than they have ever been before." In the foreword of his volume H. P. Robinson writes of the "pathos" when, in the western part of America, man invades the country of the bears and other animals. He writes:

Here in these rocky, tree-clad fastnesses the bears have kinged it for centuries. * * * Each Winter they have laid themselves down * * * to sleep through the bitter months. * * * But a Spring comes when they issue from their Winter lairs and new sounds are borne to them on the keen, resin-scented mountain air. * * * Dimly wondering at the strongeness of it all, the bears go forth, blundering and half awake, down the new-made pathways, not angry, but curious and perplexed, and by the trailside they meet man—man with a rifle in his hand. And, still not angry, still only wondering and fearing nothing—for are they not lords of all the mountainsides?—they die.

Seventeenth Century Education.

The "Pioneers of Modern Education" in the seventeenth century are considered by Prof. John W. Adamson in his volume which is being added by the Macmillan Company to the series of Contributions to the History of Education in Mediaeval and Modern Europe, edited by Prof. W. H. Woodward. Chapters are devoted to Comenius, Samuel Hartlib, John Brinsley, Milton, Ratke, William Petty, Montaigne, St. Jeno-Baptiste de la Salle, A. H. Francke, and others. "As a foil to the ideals of education or of instruction presented by the innovators," writes the author, "the actual practice of the seventeenth century schoolroom, reformed or unreformed, is described on the authority of those who knew it at first hand." A full index, a bibliography, and tables of dates, &c., have been added.

The World's Work.

The December issue of World's Work will contain the third of Eugene P. Lyle's series of papers, dealing with Venezuela, and an account by Dr. C. G. Schillings, author of "Flashlights in the Jungle," of his expedition to the heart of Africa for photographs of wild animals. The paper will be illustrated by twenty reproductions of photographs taken in the jungle, and will show lions, giraffes, zebras, &c., in their native haunts. Henry Beach Needham, author of the character study of Secretary Root in the current World's Work, has become a member of the staff of this periodical, and will begin in the January issue a series of articles on the United States Senate.

Immediate Holt Publications.

Henry Holt & Co. will bring out "Losers' Luck," by Charles Tenney Jackson, a new California author, in which the "dagoes" of South America are shown to be more formidable than is usually thought to be the case, and "The Peter Newell Mother Goose," by Miss Carolyn Sherwin Bailey, with twenty pictures by the well-known "Alice in Wonderland" artist. The publishers, by the way, report that, with the landing of Miss May Sinclair in this country her "Divine Fire" has gone to a tenth printing.

Mary of Modena.

E. P. Dutton & Co. announce the publication of Martin Haile's "Life of Mary of Modena, Queen of James II." This was James's second wife, and the only Italian who ever shared the English throne. The author has drawn on contemporary letters and dispatches. The illustrations comprise thirteen photogravures from contemporary letters.

American Books Abroad.

The Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Company of Boston is having published in England, through Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co. of London, Harry Leon Wilson's new book, "The Boss of Little Arcady." They have just sent to Australia editions of George Cary Eggleston's "A Daughter of the South" and Mrs. Mary E. Stona Bassett's "The Little Green Door."

A Chinaman's Views on the Status of Railroading in China.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

IS not Mr. Adams mistaken in stating that the Hankow-Canton Railroad is a concession held by Americans, in his review of Archibald Little's book, in your issue of Oct. 21? Last Summer this concession was, if I recall rightly, disposed of to the Chinese.

Let me ask of you to publish a short abstract on this question from the Chinese standpoint. The inclosed is an abstract of a paper read by Mr. Wang before the Economic Section of the American Association for the Advancement of Science at Philadelphia, as published in Science, March 24, 1905.

JOHN FRANKLIN CROWELL,
Secretary Section L, American Association for Advancement of Science.

Washington, Oct. 24, 1905.

[Inclosure.]

THE PRESENT STATUS OF RAILROADING IN CHINA. Chung Hui Wang, Yale University Law School.

This present method of railroading in China constitutes one of the prime factors in the shaping of the future destiny of that country. While other countries are now lined with networks of railways, we find that in China the 'iron road' has not yet become a household word. Foreign observers who have but a superficial view of the subject do not hesitate to attribute the cause of this to the superstition, ignorance, prejudice, and what not of the Chinese people. In my opinion there are two fundamental causes back of this, the one financial and the other political. If we bear in mind that the construction of every mile of railroad costs upward of $10,000, we can well imagine the financial difficulties with which we are confronted in the construction of a complete system of railroads. Moreover, the heavy indemnities and exactions which have been wrung from us by the foreign powers at different periods since the opium war of 1841 up to the Boxer uprising of 1900 have almost exhausted our resources, and have consequently increased the difficulties of our problem. Again, railroading is more than a mere economic undertaking; it has political as well as strategic importance. The main objection which has been urged by the high officials against the adoption of railroads is that as long as China is not strong enough to defend herself against foreign aggressions, the presence of railways would be a constant menace to the safety of the country. If we read the Chinese State papers on the subject we shall notice that the problem has been somewhat overestimated in its political and strategic importance, and underestimated in its economic and commercial aspects.

To Li Hung Chang is usually given the credit for the construction of the first permanent railway in China in connection with the Kiping coal mines, eighty-four miles northeast of Tien-Tsin; but the credit is justly due to a subordinate official, Mr. Tong King Shing, the pioneer of the introduction of modern improvements into China.

on its title page and the word "Finis" as a colophon.

The same applies to a Bible of 1585.

Antonio Verderio's "Imagines Deorum, Qui ab Antiquis Colebantur," bears on its title page the imprint, "Lvdvni, Apvd Stephanvm Michaelem. MDLXXXI." and as a colophon, "Lvgduni, Excudebat Guichardus Iullieron Typographus Mense Sextilis, Ann. 1581."

Jacob Carpus's "Human Anatomy" gives neither date nor imprint on its title page, and it has no colophon; but we find on the fourth page that it was published in Paris, June 14, 1530.

Even in the fifteenth century titles to books were occasionally printed on the first page, for among the writer's treasures is an illuminated black-letter embossed vellum-bound folio of the works of Avicenna, having the title printed in red ink occupying a small space at the upper left hand corner of the first page, the remainder of the page being occupied by the text of the work in two closely printed black-letter columns, except that the page is beautifully illuminated with a large and flourishing initial letter at the top and a handsome floral vignette at the bottom of the page, executed in gold and colors as bright as when applied by the patient artist's brush more than four centuries ago. The imprint and date line is found at the end of the solid text, and informs us that it was printed in Venice in 1488. This is followed, after eighteen pages of table of contents, &c., by the word "Finis" as a colophon.

An example of printing before the day of title pages is a tall folio which has absolutely no indication at the beginning of what the work might be. The first line of the first page starting from the margin without even the usual indentation marking the commencement of clauses. The page is solid to the bottom. The colophon is as follows:

Absolutum opus epistolarium. C. Plinii Junioris Neapoli.
Millesimoquadrigentesimoseptueagesmosexto.
Mense Iulii.
Impressit Mathias Moravus uir singulari
I genio: & arte. Reconnoult Iunianus maius parthenopeus rhetor publicus summa cura summaq diligentia."

Modern printers are not giving us the elaborate title pages of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, but there is as much variety in them as those furnished by the printers of the early examples quoted, as shown by the three latest acquisitions of the writer's library:

No. 1 has no date given on the title page, or anywhere else in the book, and has for a colophon the words, "The End."

No. 2 has a title page giving publisher and date; and has for a colophon, "Printed by T—— and S——s, E——h." Dashes indicate letters omitted by the writer, as he has no idea of advertising publishere unless he is paid for it.

No. 3 gives all the particulars on the title page and has the printer's device, repeated from the title page, as a colophon.

sation this passage occurs. (Volume I., Part 1, Page 211:)

The light from the west was shining full on a white cottage with a sloping garden. The cottage belonged to the Wesleyan minister of the place, and had been rented by Burrows for the last six months. And just as George was turning away he saw Burrows come out of the door with a burden—a child or a woman little larger than a child—in his arms. He carried her to an armchair which had been placed on the little grass plat. This figure was almost lost in the chair, and sat motionless while Burrows brought cushions and a stool.

Then again, near the close of the book, when Sir George is dying in the mine after the explosion, the following passage occurs, (Volume II., Part 3, Page 347:)

A sound disturbed his dreams. His ear and brain struggled with it—trying to give it a name. A man's long, painful breaths—half sobs. Bewick, no doubt—thinking of the woman he loved—of the poor emaciated soul George had seen him tending in the cottage garden on that April day—

That the book is published in two volumes probably accounts in large measure both for the error and the fact that (so far as I know) it has not previously been pointed out.

Pictures of Authors.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

To-day I received the monthly list of a certain publisher. In it I find fourteen portraits of authors whose works are published by this company. A study of them and the remembrance of the two portraits, of Marie Corelli and W. W. Jacobs, which you printed, make me wonder if it is fair to the subjects to print their portraits.

The picture of Mr. Jacobs made him look like a cold boiled owl—any one who doubts need but refer to your files; that of Miss Corelli—was it Miss Corelli? It looked like a mature girl, while Miss Corelli, I am told, looks like a great deal more than that. Now, as to the baker's dozen and one of the publisher. The women come out pretty well; one of them, a would-be actress, I think, has the paint on too thickly, but that is by the way. The men, however, are anything but prepossessing. Most of them—all but one of the eight—are posing most offensively—as if they were actors, without the excuse of being actors. Mr. E. V. Lucas has an unpleasant hang-dog smirk; Mr. A. C. Benson has a parson's grin on; Mr. W. B. Yeats looks up from a poem that will convulse the world; Mr. John Luther Long is on very good terms with himself. Mr. "Jack" London—in his flannel shirt trade-mark—well, I think he's going to be seasick; Mr. Maurice Hewlett is "dig-

Roosevelt and Uncle Remus

President Roosevelt, while at Atlanta, Georgia, took occasion to say a good deal about Uncle Remus and his creator, Joel Chandler Harris. Among other things he said:

"I am very fond of Uncle Remus. Presidents may come and Presidents may go, but Uncle Remus stays put. Georgia has done a great many things for the Union, but she has never done more than when she gave Mr. Joel Chandler Harris to American literature."

Lady Bobs, Her Brother and I

A Romance of the Azores.
By JEAN CHAMBLIN.
12mo, with colored frontspiece and 15 other illustrations, $1.25.

It is hard to say whether the interest of this story lies chiefly in Miss Chamblin's animated account of life in the Azores, or whether in her equally vivacious and humorous tale of a young actress who sought rest and found a lover. The writer is lucky both in her eye for the charm and detail of scenery and in her fund of anecdote.

nified and stately," and Mr. Edwin Sandys is standing in his walking clothes with one foot on a very evident papier mache rock, posing. Thank goodness, however, none of the fourteen, man or woman, has a cigarette. (I knew a young man who gave up a promising career as a writer of novels because he would not be photographed with a cigarette between his fingers, as his publishers assured him was necessary for his success. If the cigarette has gone out, however, he may return—to pose, I imagine.) But the group is posing; there is nothing natural about the men, and about some of the women.

Now it may be interesting to see what writers look like; but is not the desire to see their pictures wholly morbid? Is it one that should be encouraged? Is it good business? I, for one, feel as if I should never want to read another Jacobs story, or another one by "Jack" London, or by Hewlett or Benson. Do other readers feel like me? (By the way, I take it that I shall read their books; but it will be against my better inclinations.)

Cleopatra's Death.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Historians seem in a quandary as to the manner of Cleopatra's death. It is certain, however, that after fourteen years of consuming and sensual passion her death must have been violent and tragic. Pride must have been its powerful motive, for at no time during her life did she show a particle of shame. Jacob Abbot shows a wide difference in his histories of Julius Caesar and Cleopatra. In his history of Julius Caesar, Page 212, (Harper, 1849,) he says: "She laid the poisonous reptile on her naked arm and died immediately of the bite which it inflicted."

On this same page he declares that it was at a great banquet that her death occurred. Then, immediately afterward, in his history of Cleopatra, Page 316-17, (Harper, 1851,) he declares: "Cleopatra was alone with her two waiting women. On entering the room she was lying dead on a couch. They looked about the room, but no poison or weapons were to be found. They examined the body with great care, but no marks of any bite or sting could be found except two slight and scarcely discernible punctures on the arm."

Lord, in his "Beacon Lights of History," says: "She destroyed herself not probably by the bite of asps, as is the popular opinion, but by some potent and subtle poison." (Vol. 5, Page 43.) Plutarch says: "Cleopatra locked herself in her monument and sent a letter to Caesar. Caesar suspected something had happened and sent messengers at full speed. On opening the doors they found Cleopatra stone dead, but what really took place is known to no one. The asp was not seen within the monument, nor was there so much as a spot found upon her body."

Merivale says: "Cleopatra retired to her monument and was found dead the next morning. Cause unknown." Siddell: "The manner of her death was never ascertained."

In Abbott's "History of Caesar" he states it was an asp, and immediately afterward, in his history of Cleopatra, says that "the means and manner of her death are an impenetrable mystery." Judging from the various quotations I have given the manner of Cleopatra's death must be, as he states in her history, an impenetrable mystery, and not, as he states in Caesar's history, the bite of an asp. It is up to Andrew Lang to add an addition to his historical mysteries. LAWRENCE CORTRIGHT.

An Error of Macaulay.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

The statement has frequently been made that Macaulay, as an historian, is inaccurate and unreliable; but specific examples of his inaccuracies are rarely at the finger tips of his critics. I have discovered, however, a curious and interesting misstatement of fact in his history, which, though it may be intrinsically unimportant, is nevertheless a careless error.

In Chapter VI. he makes the following assertion: "On the twelfth of November (1685,) the House of Commons resolved itself into a Committee on the Royal Speech. The Solicitor General, Heneage Finch, was in the chair, &c." Now, it appears on the authority of Lord Campbell that Heneage Finch died Dec. 18, 1682; and that he received the appointment of Solicitor General on June 6, 1680, holding the same for ten years, when he succeeded Sir Jeffrey Palmer as Attorney General. Lord Campbell, too, specifically states that at this session of Parliament it was the Lord Chancellor Jeffreys who presided. [See Campbell's Lives of the Lord Chancellors and Keepers of the Great Seal. Vol. 3, Page 552.]

"An Habitation," &c.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

A reader in Norwich, Conn., wishes to call my attention to "the fact that an English speaker would not say 'an historian' or 'an habitation,' but 'an 'istorian' and 'an 'abitation.'" As I said in my first note, it is evident that in such words "the aspirate is less distinctly pronounced" than in those accented on the first syllable, but I doubt whether it would be entirely suppressed by an Englishman unless he was a "cockney."

My Norwich critic also says: "It is an error to think that any dictionary is 'authority' either in spelling or pronunciation of words. A dictionary is simply a mirror. It can never have any other province than to reflect usage."

Precisely so. That is what it should do; for, as Horace says, Usage (usus) is "et jus et norma loquendi," (both the rule and the law of speech,) and Aulus Gellius says: "Consuetudo omnium domina rerum, tum maxime verborum est." (Custom is the mistress of everything, and especially of the use of words.) And all the modern rhetoricians echo these ancient dicta. W. J. ROLFE.

What "Valerian Law"?

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

The death of Julius Caesar has gone into history as an "assassination," but it was not. Caesar was executed under the Valerian law, which authorized any Roman citizen instantly to put to death any one who attempted to exercise kingly authority in Rome. The Shakespearean Antony said:

> You all did see that in the Lupercal
> I thrice presented him a kingly crown,
> Which he did thrice refuse.

Brutus and the co-conspirators elected to deem that "refusal" a pretense and sham, and put Caesar to death in the Senate house. The encyclopedias do not mention this "Valerian law." Where can it be found? M. V. Z.

WIRELESS.

THE volume before us, "Wireless Telegraphy: Its History and Practice," (McGraw Publishing Company,) aims to be—and seems to succeed in being—a practical treatise on wireless telegraphy so written as to be of use both to the expert in scientific matters and to the tyro who has everything to learn. For the benefit of the latter the author, Mr. Frederick Collins, has begun with a general explanation of the theory of etheric waves—an explanation which proceeds historically and considers the various scientific discoveries in this field as they occurred. Upon this foundation he builds, explains the nature of waves in general, of light waves, of electrical vibrations, and apparatus for producing them. He discusses electric discharges, the action of ultra violet rays, direct and alternating current effects. Thus to electric oscillations and oscillators from that of Hertz to that of Marconi, Mr. Collins explains electrical "capacity," "inductance," "resistance," describes the structure and effects of induction coils and various types of "interruptor."

He explains the workings of a variety of oscillating current generators and then passes to electric wave detectors—the best known to the public being the Marconi "coherer," so much talked of when wireless telegraphy began to be a practical thing. So much accomplished, you are ready to study intelligently commercial wireless telegraphic apparatus in detail—transmitters, receptors, and all the elaborate machinery for transforming at one end powerful machine-made throbs into etheric vibrations, and, at the other, for transforming humanly indetectible etheric vibrations into audible mechanical clicks or substitutes therefor. This part, of course, includes descriptions of wireless stations on shore and on shipboard, and the various methods of "syntonization" or "tuning" together of the sending and receiving instrument. In addition there is a chapter on wireless telephony.

"Making the Most of Ourselves."

Under this title Calvin Dill Wilson, author of "The Child's Don Quixote," "The Hero of the Ynlu," "The Story of the Cid," &c., has collected his series of talks for young people which appeared from time to time in the Western papers and periodicals. The book is being issued by A. C. McClurg & Co. of Chicago.

The "talks" include some on "The Value of Right Pronunciation," "The Value of Accurate Language," "Manner and One's Personality," "Virile Reading for Young Men," "The Duty of Learning to Laugh," "Women's Thought-Currents," "Don't Imitate: Be Yourself," "The Life Beautiful," "Posing as a Genius," "The Advantages of College Education," "Remembering Faces and Names," "The Influence of Church-Going," "Relaxations for Young Men," "The Ministry as a Career," "Popularizing Knowledge," "A Lesson in Pluck," &c.

"Paintings of the Louvre."

Dr. Arthur Mahler's "Paintings of the Louvre," which was written in collaboration with Carlos Blacker and William Slater, and bears the imprint of Doubleday, Page & Co., is intended as a practical guide and handbook, and not as a criticism, as has been assumed in some quarters.

For Beginners in Arabic.

The new edition of Frederic du Pre Thornton's series on "Elementary Arabic"—a grammar and three or four reading books—which has been prepared by Reynold A. Nicholson, will include a number of additions and corrections. Each part will be a separate volume, and the first, the "Grammar," is now ready and is brought out here by the Macmillan Company.

HARPER'S BOOK NEWS.

Booth Tarkington's new novel "The Conquest of Canaan" is now published. See announcement elsewhere.

The Gambler

"Bound to be the literary sensation of the hour," declares the New York Sun of this new novel by the author of "The Masquerader." Mrs. Thurston has surpassed herself. "The Gambler" is more than a breathless story of striking incidents. It portrays a fascinating and unusual heroine, and in the moving story of her life the tale rises to tremendous heights.

"It deserves a wider and more enthusiastic circle of readers than 'The Masquerader.' The reader is led from situation to situation with unflagging eagerness to know 'what next?'"
—N. Y. Times.

The Debtor

Mary E. Wilkins Freeman, whose New England tales have touched the hearts of thousands of readers in a way that few books have, in this novel draws a hero of no common sort. His chequered career is appealingly portrayed. It is a searching study of character and also a well-told tale—told in the true Mary E. Wilkins style. There is here a love story of the most alluring type, while the unusual fortunes of "The Debtor" are sure to be followed with eager interest.

American Diplomacy.

Its Spirit and Achievements

This series of papers by Professor John Bassett Moore, the greatest living authority of the history of American diplomacy, has commanded wide attention both in this country and abroad. It places many facts before the public for the first time, and shows how the American policy of carrying on international dealings squarely and above board has made American diplomacy one of the great formative forces in modern history.

The Reconstruction of Religious Belief

An interesting and timely volume on the great subject of the contradictions between science and religion. The author, W. H. Mallock, takes a new point of view. He accepts all the teachings of science, and then adopting the scientific method goes on to show how religion may still justify itself and solve the apparent contradictions that beset an ultimate solution.

The "Real" Bible.

The keynote of Prof. Koenig's work in his "Bible History" is indicated in the course of his preface, wherein he writes:

It remains to determine how the results of modern criticism, which seems to us to have been permanently and scientifically established, should be presented to young people; for it is intolerable to suppose that we have reached a point where what is true for theologians is not true for our children. We cannot admit that there may be two Bibles, one for the learned and one for the ignorant; that there is in Protestantism a sort of esoteric doctrine, fit for the initiated but forbidden to the crowd. Protestantism has never feared to communicate to the people what she has considered to be the truth; if the truth was the great liberator in the beginning, it must be so to-day, and will be so as long as the world lasts. God has no need for our reticence; if we would save the faith, we must do it through sincerity.

The volume consists of fifty lessons and has been written for the student from twelve years upward. It is published by McClure, Phillips & Co. The author will be remembered as the companion of Pastor Charles Wagner during his lecture tour in America a year ago.

STANDARD POETRY.

THE MUSES' LIBRARY. Edited by A. H. Bullen. Each volume with an introduction and notes. 16mo, cloth. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. 50 cents.

To bring together in attractive form the best texts of the less-known English poets, and to offer them to the public at a reasonable price—such is the idea of the series of books called "The Muses' Library." Under Mr. A. H. Bullen's editorial direction, the idea has been carried out successfully; and the "Library" now includes the works of many well-known and more almost forgotten poets. Though the general editing has been in Mr. Bullen's hands, other critics have looked after the various writers whose works compose the library. For example: William Butler Yeats edits the poems of William Blake, Prof. G. A. Aitken those of Andrew Marvell, Mrs. Meynell those of Coventry Patmore, and the other poets are in equally capable hands.

It is interesting to note how widely popular many of the poems of the English "minor poets" are. With the exception of Keats and Coleridge—and we except the latter, and possibly the former, "under correction"—none of the chief metrical writers of England is included in "The Muses' Library" thus far completed. Yet among the works of the lesser poets represented here are found poems as unforgotten and unforgettable as any by poets who rank them in critical estimation. Edmund Waller still lives as the author of "Go, lovely rose"; Henry Vaughan's "They are all gone into a world of light," still keeps the memory of the Silurist green; Coleridge's "Hymn Before Sunrise in the Vale of Chamouni," Gay's "Black-Eyed Susan," Marvell's "The Spacious Firmament on High," Miss Proctor's "Lost Chord," are all living poems of their respective writers, and more than merely remembered. "The Muses' Library" brings these familiar poems within reach of the many and opens to them the gate for a fuller and more intimate acquaintance with writers who are by no means worthy of neglect merely because they are not in the very first rank of English poets.

The Barbizon Painters.

Arthur Tomson shows in his study of Jean François Millet in the volume "Jean François Millet and the Barbizon School" (12mo. New and cheaper edition. Illustrated. Pp. 231. Boards. Green cloth. New York: The Macmillan Company. $2.25.) that the painter's sorrows have been, for the most part, exaggerated by certain writers:

While in conversation with a well-known collector and possessor of many beautiful pictures by Millet, I mentioned that the creator of a certain drawing, at which we were looking, could never have been as unhappy a man as Millet was generally represented to be. The answer that I received was, "No, he was not always unhappy. Many a time have I talked at length with Mme. Millet about her husband, and she assured me that at Barbizon Millet was far from unhappy; there he had everything that he wanted."

And Mr. Tomson goes on to describe the master's life at Barbizon and his relations to the other painters there. The other chapters in the book deal with the life and work of Jules Dupré, Narcisse-Virgilia Diaz, and Theodore Rousseau, and in a chapter on "The Influence of the Romantic School" are briefly considered Paul Huet, Charles Jacque, Jules Breton, Monticelli, Bastien-Lepage, Adolphe Hervier, Harpignies, and two or three others.

The illustrations number fifty-three, and include examples of some of the best-known pictures of the artists studied—Millet's "Goose Maiden," Rousseau's study of a tree, Dupré's "The Pool" and landscapes, Diaz's "Girl Playing with a Dog," and others.

This "new and cheaper" edition of a measurably well-known and highly prized work now places a delightful and authoritative series of connoisseur studies—critical, biographical, intimate—within reach of the humblest admirer and disciple of that great French open-air school which combined a free and healthy romancing with nature's realities, and gave the initial impulse to impressionism.

WILLIAM L. FRASER.

An Appreciation of the Character and Gifts of the Recently Deceased Artist.

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

IN the recent death of William Lewis Fraser the artists and wood engravers of America have lost one of their most intimate and sympathetic friends.

A little over a quarter of a century ago Mr. Fraser closed his career in the practice of art to assist in the management of The Century Magazine, (then Scribner's Monthly.) This was the period of the "new school," as it is termed, in wood engraving and that wave of enthusiasm among the younger painters of America who brought back with them from their student days in France new perceptions of the meaning or art and an advance in technical knowledge and methods which opened the door for free individual expression, hitherto closed to the prisoners of tradition.

To these forces in the younger men Mr. Fraser, as young in spirit as they, and with longer experience unwarped by prejudice for any school, helped to give direction, in co-operation with Mr. Drake, the chief of the art department. In the field of illustration, where his position might have been, in a less cultivated and sympathetic mind, the occasion of wounding the sensitive artistic temperament unnecessarily, his honest judgment was not only not resented, but, it may safely be said, invariably received with the artist's ready appreciation of true practical criticism. He had the rare faculty of puncturing a fault without leaving a sting. One day an artist, after long struggles with a refractory drawing, presented it to Mr. Fraser, who received it without a word, good or bad. "Well, what do you think of it?" he ventured in the somewhat chilly atmosphere. "I think you can do better," came from the formidable-looking little man behind his spectacles. Not so much the words as the inflection acted like a spur. The artist went away with his labored production, and, putting every fibre of his being into a new composition, soon earned the coveted few words of approbation.

As is natural, during the progressive movement alluded to, many "fads" were developed, at first glance likely to be mistaken for new and true principles just brought to light. It was here that the youthful spirit and sound judgment of Mr. Fraser divined rightly. Never losing his poise, he always gave sympathetic consideration to every phase of art, unerringly discriminating between the actually spurious and that which, although perhaps only in embryo, contained a genuine impulse.

Outside the sphere of magazine and book illustration, his opinion and judgment were sought by painters and sculptors alike, with whom he always maintained a friendly fellowship. His practical judgment in the affairs and exhibitions of the Salmagundi Club, now so popular, did much to further that end.

Mr. Fraser will also be remembered as a useful and brilliant entertainer, as a lecturer on the history and character of illustration, involving great research into early printing and engraving, especially wood-engraving in this country. It is much to be regretted that he did not live to finish a comprehensive work on this subject long in progress, although a fire which destroyed his notes and many books and prints of reference might have rendered the task impossible.

As a man, William Fraser was many-sided. Full of fun and an excellent story teller and mimic, he was a leading spirit in society. His home and family life was pure, sweet, and self-denying. Deep in his nature, under the stress and glamour of a professional career ran the pure stream of his religious life, the influence of which Christian spirit will always be felt in many waysids and obscure places.

The Abolition Movement.

"The Abolitionists," by John F. Hume, an old-time anti-slavery worker, is in active preparation by G. P. Putnam's Sons for publication the middle of next month. The author shows that Garrison and Lundy and other agitators were really the initiators of the movement which later turned into the Republican Party and caused the election of Lincoln to the Presidency. In his first chapter he deals with President Roosevelt's attitude toward the Abolitionists in his biography of Thomas H. Benton in Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s American Statesmen Series. Mr. Hume writes:

His (Roosevelt's) words make it very manifest that, if Mr. Roosevelt had been a voter in 1840, he would not have been an Abolitionist. He would not have been one of that devoted little band of political philanthropists who went out like David of old to do battle with one of the giant abuses of the time, and who found in the voter's ballot a missile that they used with deadly effect. On the contrary, he would have enrolled himself among their adversaries and appellants, becoming a member—because it is impossible to think of Theodore Roosevelt as a non-partisan—of one of the leading political parties of the day. * * * In failing to support one or the other of these parties, * * * the Abolitionists, in Mr. Roosevelt's opinion, "committed a political crime."

This chapter was written during the last Presidential campaign, and Mr. Hume intended to publish it. His aim was (and is) to vindicate the character of certain men—some living—others dead—from the "aspersions of a man who has since come into a position so conspicuous and so influential that his condemnation necessarily carries with it a damaging effect." But he decided to "write up" the subject, and consequently he here sets forth his reminiscences from early boyhood on, weaving in here and there a bit of history.

THE FRENCH SALON.

THE salon, always a purely French growth, came to its fullest efflorescence in Paris during the third quarter of the eighteenth century. There were, at that time, as said Lady Hervey, "societies to suit one in every humor, except a melancholy one." Mme. du Deffand held her court at the Convent St. Joseph. * * * Mlle. de Lespinasse was the fascinating hostess of the brilliant reunionism in the Rue de Belle Chasse; but among these and many others of less distinction Mme. Goeffrin's salon had a unique and pre-eminent position.

This extract from the preface gives a hint of the character of Mme. Goeffrin's salon, which Janet Aldis describes in her volume, "Madame Goeffrin: Her Salon and Her Times, (1750-1777,)" which G. P. Putnam's Sons will publish early next month. Among the causes that contributed to the prominence and popularity of this salon, the author continues, were "the pronounced and remarkable character of the hostess, her talent for steadfast friendship, the high moral tone which she maintained at her gatherings in that lax age." She goes on:

The secret is largely explained by the spirit of the times. Paris was seething with new thoughts and ideas; the desire of reform was working as secretly and surely as leaven among the accumulated abuses of that corrupt and vicious period, and Mme. Goeffrin's house, though not so recognized or labeled in her own day, was, nevertheless, the stronghold of the reform party. It was one of those singular little ironies of life that Mme. Goeffrin, * * * who once said to Diderot: "What better can I do with my money than buy peace with it?" should be the presiding spirit of the salon which was, so to speak, the nursery of the Revolution.

Mme. Goeffrin was a "homely bourgeoise without rank and connections," and, although, for this reason, she could not be received at Court, herself received Princes and Kings, Dukes and Maréchals in her own house in the Rue St. Honoré; was a patron of artists, although without a knowledge of art, and, without even having received an elementary education, was the "honored friend and adviser" of such writers as d'Alembert, Diderot, Grimm, Marmontel, Thomas, and others.

CELEBRATED CRIMES OF THE RUSSIAN COURT. By Alexandre Dumas. (Translated by Mikael Gortshakov.) Portraits. One volume, pp. xxviii.-321. Boston: L. C. Page & Co.

The elder Dumas's "Romances of the Russian Court" has been translated into English by a Russian, and now appears with the title "Celebrated Crimes of the Russian Court." Crimes these romances were, undoubtedly, from a moral point of view, but not crimes like those described in the famous French collections of "Causes Célèbres." Of course, the new name is simply to excite interest and take advantage of any that may be aroused in Russia and its "mysterious" Court.

The stories in the book have gained nothing in the course of the translation, and probably have lost much. As they are now, they are of little interest, and less historic value. The chapter on "Corruption in Russia," however, is probably as true to-day as it was half a century ago.

Euclid's Elements.

"The First Book of Euclid's Elements, with a Commentary Based Principally Upon That of Proclus Diadochus," is the full title of a long, thin 12mo, by William Barrett Franklin, M. A., published by the Macmillan Company. It includes a "close" translation of the result of Dr. Helberg's work, "by which Euclid may be seen in a truer light as the expositor of the principles of geometry in the first book of his elements," and the commentary of Proclus, translated by Taylor. Much of this commentary has been derived from various sources, including the work of Drs. Stichel and Engel and Dr. Allman.

The Late Sir Henry Irving.

Admirers of the late English actor may be interested to know that McClure, Phillips & Co. are publishing an anecdotal and historical volume, "The Lyceum and Henry Irving," by Austin Brereton. The author was assisted in the preparation of the book by Sir Henry himself, the latter having put into Mr. Brereton's hands much personal matter and allowed him to reproduce interesting objects from his collection of memorials. The volume is profusely illustrated and includes pictures in color of Edwin Long's portraits of Irving as Hamlet, and of Millais's portrait of Ellen Terry as Lady Macbeth.

New Book Notes From Page's List

RED FOX
Is selling so rapidly that we feel justified in calling it The Leading Autumn Book. John Burroughs says ROBERTS'S Animal and Nature Stories are the most brilliant that have appeared; and this is beyond all doubt his best work. The fifty drawings which illustrate the adventures of Red Fox are by Charles Livingston Bull, and are worthy of the text.

When ROBERT NEILSON STEPHENS wrote THE FLIGHT OF GEORGIANA we knew that it would have a large audience, but we could not anticipate the unanimous praise of leading critics. We quote two: "He is the master among modern writers of romance."—Phila. Press. "A well told, eventful and thoroughly satisfying story, the reading of which left us refreshed, cheered and grateful."—Everybody's Magazine.

"Another altogether delightful MRS. JIM book" is the consensus of the enthusiastic commendations of MRS. JIM AND MRS. JIMMIE, by STEPHEN CONRAD. The first "Mrs. Jim" book doubled its sales during the Fall of 1904, altho' it was published in the preceding April. "Mrs. Jim and Mrs. Jimmie" will do that and much more than that. If you haven't met Mrs. Jim or Mrs. Jimmie yet you have a treat in store for you.

Our own confidence in the fine quality of GRACE MacGOWAN COOKE'S striking novel on the Labor question, THE GRAPPLE, cannot be better expressed than in the words of the New York Times critic, who said: "Mrs. Cooke's unusual story is so original, so strong and so finely told that it deserves a large and thoughtful public and a leading place among the books of the day."

To those who enjoy a strong tale of love and intrigue and war with a mediæval setting, we recommend NATHAN GALLIZIER'S CASTEL del MONTE, a love tale of old Palermo during the Ghibelline Wars of which the Chicago Tribune said, "It is as strong as the dramas of Sardou."

THE Literary Department of the PHILADELPHIA PUBLIC LEDGER is one which the Publishers have especially striven to expand and improve. To this end, extensive literary notes are published every day in the week, and on Saturdays and Sundays,—the special review days,—there is more space given over to able criticisms and discussions of current publications than is devoted to that purpose by any other newspaper in Philadelphia. This course, very naturally, has centred the attention of the intelligent portion of the community in the PUBLIC LEDGER, and has made it the literary authority of Philadelphia. The book advertising as a natural sequence has followed. The Public Ledger carries more publisher's advertising than any other Philadelphia newspaper.

QUERIES.

TO secure attention in this department every communication must be signed with the full name and address of the inquirer, which will not be published unless the inquirer so desires. Trivial questions will not be heeded. Queries will be answered in the order of their receipt, and as the number received weekly is very large and the pressure upon our columns is always very great, inquirers must always be prepared to await their turn.

GIOVANNI SHAW, 132 East Twenty-third Street, New York.—What books did your talented correspondent William Drysdale write? He went for a trip down the Mississippi and visited Bermuda and New Providence. I think the Harpers published a cheap edition with many illustrations about Bermuda.

He wrote "In Sunny Lands; Outdoor Life in Nassau and Cuba," 1885, and compiled "Proverbs from Plymouth Pulpit," selected from Beecher's sermons, in 1887; "The Princess of Montserrat," "The Mystery of Abel Forefinger," "The Young Reporter," "The Fast Mail," "The Beach Patrol," "The Young Supercargo," "Cadet Standish of the St. Louis," "Helps for Ambitious Boys," "Helps for Ambitious Girls," and "The Treasury Club."

O. H. J., East Orange, N. J.—Shortly after the assassination of Lincoln, London Punch, in recantation, published several stanzas, the first of which ran:

"Beside this corpse, which bears for winding sheet
The Stars and Stripes be lived in rear anew,
Between the mourners at his head and feet,
Say, scurrile jester, is there room for you?"

Can you give the text of the remaining stanzas or tell me where they can be found?

The poem, "Abraham Lincoln, Foully Assassinated, April 14, 1865," appeared in Punch for May 24, 1865, and is popularly ascribed to Tom Taylor; Mr. Spielmann, in his "History of Punch," says it was by Shirley Brooks. The poem begins, "You lay a wreath on murdered Lincoln's bier"; the stanza you quote is the fourth. There are nineteen stanzas in all, too many to print here. You will find the poem, this spelling somewhat modified, in Carman's "World's Best Poetry," and in other collections.

French, Brooklyn.—The preface to a book published in 1727 is signed: "Io, Don Diego Cavallero del Quercetano." Will you please tell me the name of this author—whether Io, Cavallero, or Quercetano?

The author of the preface was Diego del Quercetano. "Io" or "Yo" means "I"; "Don" is a title, meaning "Sir"; "Cavallero" means "knight." Don Diego may have been a descendant of José Duchesne, who Latinized his name to Quercetanus and was made a Don as an advanced in 1711. The "Fee" of the signature may be "Fec," the abbreviation of the Latin word "Fecit," meaning "made."

N. F. JONES, New York.—Kindly inform me what are the titles of books written by Arthur Symons. I should also like to know the names of the publishers of each book.

"An Introduction to the Study of Browning," 1885, Cassell & Co.; "Days and Nights," 1889, Macmillan; "Silhouettes," 1892; "London Nights," 1895; "Amoris Victima," 1897; "Studies in Two Literatures," 1897; "Aubrey Beardsley," 1898, Mansfield Company; "The Symbolist Movement in Literature," 1899; "Images of Good and Evil," 1900; "Collected Poems," 1901, two volumes, John Lane; "Plays, Acting, and Music," 1903, E. P. Dutton & Co.; "Cities," 1903, James Pott & Co.; "Studies in Prose and Verse," 1904, E. P. Dutton & Co. He has assisted in editing the Mermaid Series of Plays, published by Charles Scribner's Sons, and the Essays of Leigh Hunt. The books not followed by the names of publishers were not issued in this country, seemingly.

"M. H.," Bronxville, N. Y.—The quotation asked for by "M. M. H.," Tuxedo Park, "Myself, arch traitor to myself," is from a poem of Christine Rossetti's: "Whn shall deliver me?"

SIEGFRIED STEINBERG: In answer to query of "W. L. F.," New York, relative to a recent parody on Poe's "Raven," I desire to say that there is a parody entitled "Der Crow Bird—After der Raven," written by A. J. Shad, in The Baltimorean. This poem appears on Page 50 of Hanny's Popular Readings and Recitations, Book No. 6. If this is the poem referred to and a copy of it is desired I will be glad to send it to him.

Messrs. McClure, Phillips & Co. write that "The Letters of a Chinese Official" are by G. Lowes Dickinson, and are original in every respect.

S. R. K., Ardsley, N. Y.—In the preface to "The Ingoldsby Legends" is an account of a person spoken of as "W. G., late editor of The Literary Museum." It concludes by saying that he was an American, and, returning to this country, was killed in a duel in the Autumn of 1827. The person meant was William Graham. I discovered this by an article in THE TIMES some twenty-five years ago, giving an account of his duel with Mr. Barton of New York. Can you tell me who the Mr. Barton was who figured in this duel—what was his first name, and if anything is known of Graham other than the strange stories told of him in "Ingoldsby"?

Graham was William G. Graham, associate editor of The Courier and Enquirer of this city. He pushed or struck, or otherwise retaliated on Barton, whose first name never appears. Barton talked a good deal, Graham said, of his skill as a marksman, his reputation as a duelist, and his position in society. Graham despised the duello as a means of deciding a question of honor, but because his antagonist was a good shot, and he had struck him, did not dare to avoid the meeting, which he expected to be fatal.

anthologies I have consulted, except one. In this there are thirty-seven stanzas, three having been interpolated just before the final one, and there are verbal changes in several of the other stanzas. It is obvious that the poem was at some time revised, probably by the author. I should like to know which he preferred as the final form, but I am unable to decide this from my copy, which has no date, and I have no access to any other edition. Please settle this question for me. (2) In my copy of Bayard Taylor's poems, which is the authorized edition, published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. in 1883, five years after the author's death, and declared in the preface to contain "the entire poetical works of Bayard Taylor," except certain specified dramatic pieces, I fail to find the poem entitled "To M. T.," given at Page 275 of Stedman's American Anthology. Why is this?

(1) From the preface to the slovenly collected edition of 1880, published by Roberts Brothers, it appears that Arnold liked the thirty-seven-stanza version. Probably the three interpolated stanzas will explain his preference. (2) We do not know. Perhaps M. T. (Mrs. Taylor?) did not care to publish it in 1883. Stedman's book appeared in 1900.

E. P. B., Flushing, N. Y.—Can you give me a brief account of Judge Thomas Chandler Haliburton—"Sam Slick"?

Haliburton was born in Windsor, N. S., in 1796; was admitted to the bar in 1820, and soon had a good practice. In 1828 he was appointed Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, holding office until 1840, when the court was abolished, and he was assigned to the Supreme Court. In 1856 he resigned and went to England, where he died in 1865. In 1825 and 1829 he published histories of Nova Scotia, in 1835 he began his "Sam Slick" stories—"The Clockmaker," three series, published in 1837, 1838, and 1840; "Sam Slick's Wise Saws and Modern Instances," 1843; "The Attaché; or, Sam Slick in England," 1843-4. He wrote many other books. He sat in the Legislative Assembly of Nova Scotia, 1825-28, and in the British House of Commons, 1859-65.

A. G. H., Washington.—M. L. H., Yonkers, N. Y., will find that the lines desired, "Though Christ a thousand times," &c., were written by Angelus Silesius. I send a copy.

Angelus was the name taken by Johannes Scheffler, M. D., when he became a Catholic priest, 1653; Silesius indicated that the angel was of Silesian origin. The verses are to be found on Pages 13 and 14 of Schaff and Gilman's "Library of Religious Poetry."

T. S. A., Jamaica, N. Y.—Kindly send me a copy of a poem entitled, "The Ball at Brussels the Night Before the Battle of Waterloo."

The only poem of this natnre is a portion of Byron's "Childe Harold," canto third, stanzas 21-28.

F. B., New York.—Please name some books on old Scottish history, and also some of late date.

Scottish history practically ends with the accession of James VI. to the English throne; since that date the history of England and of Scotland are treated as that of one country. About the most recent history of Scotland is that ascribed to Andrew Lang, in three volumes, $10.50. The standard history is John Hill Burton's, in eight volumes, at about the same price, or somewhat less.

N. B. V., Omaha, Neb.—Please advise me where I can procure a copy of "Travels in North America," by Maximilian, Prince of Wied, (Nenwied,) published, I believe, in the second decade of the nineteenth century.

You can get this only accidentally, as it is not in print. The German edition was published at Coblentz in 1839-41, and an English translation by H. A. Lloyd in London in 1843.

C. C. MEISTER, Chicago.—I have an original copy of The New York Morning Post, dated Nov. 7, 1783, printed by Morton & Horner, 7 Water Street, between the old Coffee House and Old Slip. Volume III., Number 155. Would you be kind enough to tell me what paper at present in New York originated from above, or can you give me any information regarding its origin? Has it any value as a relic or not?

No paper of to-day derives from The New York Morning Post of 1783. This seems to be a rare paper, as the New York Public Library has merely a facsimile of the paper of same date as your copy.

C. G. O., Brooklyn.—Where can I get four novels, once published in New York, I think, by Appleton or Harper—"Beyminstre," "Mr. Warrenne," "The Silent Woman," "King's Cope."

The first and the last of these are by Ellen Wallace, and were published by Loring of Boston in the early seventies; the Mercantile Library has copies. We do not place the others.

M. D. S., Mount Vernon, N. Y.—Please inform me whether the edition of 1848, in brown cloth, (faded,) but in good condition, of Lowell's "Biglow Papers" is of any money value?

If this is a copy of the original impression it may be worth $10.

H. H., New York.—The expression "Captains of Indnstry" has become familiar and a fixture in the language. In 1850 Carlyle, in his "Latter-Day Pamphlet," "The Present Time," wrote "* * * the real Captain, unless it be some Captain of mechanical industry hired by Mammon, where is he?" He also mentions "* * * the beginning of a new, real, and not imaginary aristocracy * * * the Captains of Industry." Was Carlyle the originator of the phrase, or are we indebted to some earlier writer for it?

A. EMERSON PALMER, Brooklyn.—In reply to R. G. B., Orange, N. J., I think the wild-goose chase in the Century Cyclopædia of Names to which he refers is the following:

(1) Kiswahili or Kisuahili. See Suahili.
(2) Suahili. See Swahili.
(3) Swahili or Suahili. See Kiswahili.

So the entries appear in my edition. I am not aware that a later edition has been published. This matter was mentioned by me in a letter to THE REVIEW seven or eight years ago; it was first brought to my attention by Mr. Cyrus C. Adams, whose name is familiar to your readers. In my former letter I also spoke of the following curious entries in the Century Cyclopædia:

(1) Menkib. A rarely used Arabic name for the second-magnitude star Beta Pegasi, more usually called Scheat.
(2) Scheat. A name given to the second-magnitude star Beta Pegasi, usually known as Menkib.

H. W. MAIN, New York.—In reply to S. B., the hymn, "I Dreamed, and Lo! 'Twas Sabbath Eve," &c., was written by Fanny J. Crosby, the music arranged from an old song by P. Phillips. After each of the four stanzas an old hymn was sung to an old tune. After Verse 1, "Windham" was sung to "Show Pity, Lord, O Lord, Forgive"; after Verse 2, "Arlington to "Am I a Soldier of the Cross?"; after Verse 3, "Coronation" to "O for a Thousand Tongues to Sing"; after Verse 4, "The Heavenly Shore" to hymn, "There'll Be No Sorrow There." This was published in a revised edition of "The Singing Pilgrim" about 1870. The book is out of print now, but can occasionally be found in the old book stores.

M. B. W., Cambridge, Mass.—"Of old Damien, of whose weaknesses (and worse) perhaps I heard fully, I think only the more. He was a European peasant, dirty, bigoted, untruthful, unwise, tricky, but superb with generosity, residual candour, and fundamental good humor." This is R. L. Stevenson's own description of the leper priest of Molokai. Can you tell me if the late Rev. Mr. Hyde ever said worse of him? What is "residual candour" that excuses practical and operative trickery and lying? What is fundamental good humor to make so offensive a creature into a first-class Stevensonian hero?

Mr. Hyde said nothing worse of Father Damien than Stevenson said. The cult of the Leper Priest was largely among Protestants or non-Catholics. Persons who had investigated the circumstances knew that Father Damien need not have contracted leprosy, and considered Stevenson's attack on Hyde as simply a tour de force. Much of Stevenson's work in Samoa and elsewhere in the Pacific was injudicious, to say the least, and his defense of Father Damien at Mr. Hyde's expense is not one of the least injudicious of his writings. By "residual candour" might be understood the truth uttered when it was not worth while to prevaricate; every one has some basis of good humor in his composition, if it can be reached.

MRS. T. R. G., Baltimore.—The poem asked for by L. Helma was written by Col. W. S. Hawkins, C. S. A., while a prisoner in Camp Chase. When released by the close of the war he reached his home only to die. He wrote other poems equally as touching.

J. CARDROSS BROWNE, Brooklyn.—The reference by L. M. W. of Cowesville, Va., is to "In Memoriam," the eighty-third or eighty-fourth section, according to the edition, and the fifth stanza:

"My blood an even tenor kept,
Till on mine ear this message falls,
That in Vienna's fatal walls
God's finger touched him, and he slept."

J. WALLIS COOK, Brooklyn, N. Y.—In your Query Department of Oct. 14 J. J. Machride of Newark wishes to know the best translation of "Don Quixote." Having read "Don Quixote" in the original, and knowing the book pretty well, I consider the translation made by John Ormsby, published in four volumes, by Dodd, Mead & Co., 1897, as the best. It contains a fine introduction, an excellent life of Cervantes, profuse in notes, map, proverbs, all collected together, and a bibliography. Whoever takes this translation will get a better idea of the work than from any other.

EUGENE C. DANA, Niles, Mich.—The recent parody on Poe's "Raven," asked for by W. L. F., New York, was written by Jabe Smiley of Kalamazoo, author of "St. Peter at the Gate." He did not mean it to be considered as from an intoxicated man's standpoint, but readers and "elocutionists" have seen fit to give it in that style. Knowing that Poe drank to excess he did suggest in conversation that he must have been inebriated when he wrote of a lamp on a table throwing a shadow on the floor, when, from where the bird sat, it must have been thrown on the ceiling.

C. E. BARNDOLLAR, Mount Vernon, N. Y.—J. V. M., Dorchester, Mass., will find the lines, "What Is Truth?" &c., in Cowper's "Task," Book III., Line 270.

Appeals to Readers.

H. H. LAUGHLIN, Kirkville, Mo.—I am looking for a poem in which the lines occur: "Of all the flowers that in the garden grow, I am the acknowledged king."

I think it was the rose talking to the strawberry. It was from a book of nature or flower poems, but I have forgotten both the author and the title.

TIMES READER, New York.—Some time ago I heard a poem of which I can recall but the last lines. It referred to some small flowers. The lines were these:

"With all a father's passion,
With all a mother's pain,
I love you, little darlings.
Will you love me back again?"

I would greatly appreciate any information as to where the complete poem could be found.

C. E. H., Flathush, N. Y.—I have a very old picture, apparently painted or printed on tin, a portrait of a lady who is reading Hervey's Magazine. I shall be greatly obliged to you if you will tell me what you can about that magazine.

FAX, Rochester, N. Y.—Can you give me some information through your columns regarding "Travels in America," by George Fibbleton, Esq., ex-barber to his Majesty the King of Great Britain, New York, 1833?

MAY ELLIS, Roxbury, Vt.—Can you tell me the author of the following and where it may be found?

"Great God, my lowliness takes heart to play
Beneath the shadow of Thy state,
The only comfort of my littleness
Is, that Thon art so great."

G. E. C., Brooklyn.—What is the book in which "Hope Wayns" is a character? I think it appeared in The London Graphic between twenty-four and twenty-seven years ago.

M. L. DE S., New York.—Where can I find a description of a cannon used in the Revolution called "The Old Sow"?

SUBSCRIBER, Akron, Ohio, wishes to know the author of a humorous sketch called "Mrs. Brown at the Play."

A. L. T., Princeton, N. J., wishes the title and name of the publisher of a child's book of illustrated verse in which a poem occurs describing a little lad's disappointment at not being able to go to the circus.

J. A. L., New York, wishes to learn who wrote the novel "Will He Find Her?" published about thirty years ago.

Revell Books.

The Fleming H. Revell Company will bring out this Fall "When Joy Begins," a new story of New England life, and a woman's "inner life," by Clara E. Laughlin, who says she intended it as a sequel to her "Evolution of a Girl's Ideal." This house also acquired the first novel by Owen Kildare, author of "My Mamie Rose." It is entitled "The Wisdom of the Simple," with the scenes in New York's nether world. The characters, streets, &c., are all said to be drawn from life.

Alabama History.

The Macmillan Company is publishing to-day "Civil War and Reconstruction in Alabama," by Prof. Walter L. Fleming of the West Virginia University. This is a study of the political, social, and economic effects of the rebellion and reconstruction upon institutions that existed "befo' the war." The volume, which is one of the Columbia University Press publications, is illustrated with eighteen maps, forty half-tones, fac similes of documents, &c.

Pigmy Land.

The Fleming H. Revell Company will shortly publish "On the Borders of Pigmy Land," by Mrs. Ruth B. Fisher, the wife of a missionary. It is a well-known fact that the most obscure of the Central African tribes has a way of eluding those seeking information about it, but Mrs. Fisher made friends with the pigmies, and now describes their way and their life with the pen and through photographs.

FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

Romance, History, Art Works, and General Literature.

RANDALL Parrish's new romance, "A Sword of the Old Frontier," which is published to-day by A. C. McClurg & Co. of Chicago, is something in the vein of Cooper's "The Pathfinder." It recounts the adventures of a French soldier during the period of the conspiracy at Pontiac in the American wildernesses. It contains several colored illustrations from paintings by F. C. Yohn. With the first edition of 25,000 copies of this story, the publishers state that 100,000 copies of Mr. Parrish's stories have been printed since the appearance of "When Wilderness Was King" within a year and a half. The author's second book is "My Lady of the North," which is reported in its eighth edition.

Vol. IV. of Herbert Paul's "History of Modern England," which the Macmillan Company has in active preparation, begins with the revival of the Eastern question in 1876. It goes through the war between Russia and Turkey in 1877, which ended in the Treaty of San Stefano the year following; the re-election of Gladstone, in 1880, as Prime Minister; closing with the destruction of the Liberal Government by the union of the Conservatives with the Irish Nationalists in 1885, and leaving Home Rule for future treatment.

The D. Van Nostrand Company of this city is selling for the University of Chicago Press Prof. Paul Milyoukov's "Russia and Its Crisis." The volume is made up of lectures and contains an analytical index and six maps in color.

Dodd, Mead & Co. announce that they will finally publish Esther Singleton's "Great Portraits Described by Great Writers" Oct. 31. The portraits present famous men and women of the world.

Arrangements have been made by G. P. Putnam's Sons with C. W. K. Gleerup of Lund, Sweden, for a Swedish edition of Myrtle Reed's "The Master's Violin." The publishers report that the American edition of this novel is in its thirty-ninth thousand, while the author's "At the Sign of the Jack-o'-Lantern" is in its twenty-fifth thousand.

"Nedra" is simply the idyllic word Arden reversed. This was not, it is now reported, the original title of Mr. McCutcheon's novel, which, by the way, Dodd, Mead & Co. say is in its fourth edition. The first name suggested was "Pootoo's Idols," Pootoo being the cannibal chief on the Island of Nedra, on which the hero and heroine are shipwrecked and subsequently worshipped by the natives. These publishers also report that the first edition of "The Man from Red-Keg" was exhausted before publication.

G. P. Putnam's Sons will publish early in the new year another story for boys by Herbert Strang, the successor to Henty. It is entitled "Brown of Mukden," and, like "Kobo," deals with the exploits of an English boy in the Russo-Japanese war.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co. begin the publication, with "James G. Blaine," by Edward Stanwood, of The American Statesmen, Second Series, comprising biographies of men who have been most prominent in statecraft since the civil war. The book will be followed by "John Sherman," by Theodore E. Burton of Ohio, a close friend and political leader of Sherman; "Ulysses S. Grant," by Samuel W. McCall, Congressman for Massachusetts; "William McKinley," by T. C. Dawson, United States Minister to Santo Domingo, and others. The first series will be remembered as including two volumes by President Roosevelt.

The Unit Book Publishing Company, successors to Howard Wilford Bell, have moved to 70 Fifth Avenue, and from this abode will publish Nov. 15 the ninth issue, "Letters and Addresses of Thomas Jefferson."

Dodd, Mead & Co. will issue next Tuesday another "Elsie" book by Martha Finley, bringing the number of this series up to twenty-eight.

The John Lane Company is adding to the Country Handbooks "The Little Farm," in which hints are given for fruit-growing and the raising of small stock, hens, geese, turkeys, &c. The author has not attempted to teach the reader how to manage a farm; the book is rather for the townsman who proposes to have a small country place of his own. Like the others in the series, this volume is illustrated from photographs and drawings.

Henry Holt & Co. will issue at once "Specimens of Discourse," by Dr. Arthur Lynn Andrews. The book does not contain selections from the "great writers." The specimens have been chosen with the object of teaching a student to present every-day happenings in simple and vivid English.

E. P. Dutton & Co. are bringing out "The Hatzfeldt Letters," in which Count Paul Hatzfeldt writes from the Prussian Army Headquarters during 1870-71 to his wife, and describes the campaign. The epistles were written in French, and the English version is the work of J. L. Bashford, M. A. This firm is also publishing "The Russian Revolutionary Movement," a translation from the Finnish of K. Zilliacus.

The Macmillan Company is publishing in Bell's Cathedral Series "Southwark Cathedral, Formerly the Collegiate Church of St. Saviour, Otherwise St. Mary Overie," by George Worley, author of "Jeremy Taylor: A Sketch of His Life and Times, with a Popular Exposition of His Works." A short history of the Cathedral is given, together with a description of its fabric, and an account of the college and See. There are thirty-six illustrations from photographs and old prints. Another Macmillan book is "The Work of Preaching," by Arthur S. Hoyt, discussing the growth of the sermon as a vital process.

An anthology for the holiday season is being made ready for early publication by the John Lane Company. It is entitled "Underneath the Bough: A Posie of Other Men's Flowers," gathered by Theodora Thompson. The author points out that her aim in gathering the quotations has been to make an appeal "to the emotions, to bring refreshment, encouragement, inspiration." The selections deal with "The Worldly Way," "The Law of Life," "The Face of God," &c.

Early numbers of St. Nicholas will have a new story, "The Crimson Sweater," by Ralph Henry Barbour, author of "Captain of the School," &c., and an article on "The President and the Boys," in which Maurice Francis Egan will tell of the large interest President Roosevelt takes in American boys, and his cordiality to one boy, whose visit to him is described.

Henry Holt & Co. have down for early 1906 issue, in conjunction with Methuen & Co. of London, a "fantastic" novel, in which a Bishop of the Church of England plays a Robinson Crusoe rôle.

A. C. McClurg & Co. of Chicago have made arrangements for the issue in this country of an authorized English version of Louis Elbé's "La Vie Future," under the title, "The Future Life." This book presents new scientific evidence and data about the "immortality of the soul." It has been divided into two parts—the idea of the "survival" as considered by the primitive races, and to deductions drawn from the fundamental sciences.

Doubleday, Page & Co. expect to publish in the Spring the first long story by Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd, author of "The Misdemeanors of Nancy" and "Concerning Belinda." Mrs. Brainerd is just now working on the final chapters. The publishers also announce that they have received a cable from Australia for a large edition of "The Clansman."

Thomas Y. Crowell & Co. will issue immediately "King Lear," Vol. VIII., of their "First Folio" Shakespeare. With the exception of the modern type this edition is a fac simile of the issue of 1623, containing the original spelling, punctuation, and phraseology, and in notes, suggested readings, and corrections. Full glossaries have also been inserted in the books.

The Forest and Stream Publishing Company announces for early appearance "My Sixty Years on the Plains: Trapping, Trading, and Indian Fighting," by William T. Hamilton, illustrated by Charles M. Russell, and "Houseboats and Houseboating," by Albert Bradlee Hunt, being an illustrated account of a mode of life growing popular in American waters.

Henry Frowde is bringing out "The Complete Poetical Works of William Cowper" in the Oxford editions of the poets. H. S. Milford has edited the set, and provided the reader for the first time with the text as Cowper printed it—all the various readings, miscellaneous poems arranged in chronological order, &c. He has also provided notes and a chronological table, and a portrait of Cowper has been inserted as frontispiece. This house has also taken over The World's Classics, The Parson's Handbook Series, and The Boys' Classics.

The Macmillan Company is issuing in the Endymion Series, including the poems of Keats, Browning, Shelley, Poe, and Milton, "Tennyson's Poems," illustrated by Eleanor Fortescue Brickdale, and a Teachers' Edition of "The Winchester Arithmetic," by C. Godfrey and G. M. Bell. The special features include an interleaved teachers' copy, with answers printed on inserted leaves opposite the questions, model worked-out problems, sets of oral exercises, a full graduated set of exercises on logarithms, &c.

TAMMANY'S BIGGEST RALLY OF CAMPAIGN

Bourke Cockran Addresses a Great Meeting in Carnegie Hall.

OSBORNE ON JEROME SPONSORS

Says Many of Nominators Are Connected with Life Insurance Companies—Mayor Speaks.

Seven thousand persons struggled for an hour and a half last night to get into Carnegie Hall for what proved to be the biggest Democratic meeting of the present campaign. Only about half of the crowd could be accommodated, and nearly four thousand disappointed persons were turned away by the police, who were obliged to close the doors long before 8 o'clock.

W. Bourke Cockran appeared as the star speaker of the meeting, but James W Osborne, candidate for District Attorney, though he spoke late, made an effort which aroused remarkable enthusiasm. The meeting was under the auspices of the Citizens' Independent Democracy, of which Francis Burton Harrison is the head. Mayor McClellan appeared at 10:30 o'clock and received a demonstration lasting a full twenty minutes. Other speakers included ex-Judge D Cady Herrick, Controller Edward M. Grout, Herman A. Metz, and Patrick F. McGowan.

Mr. Osborne spoke for the first time in several days. Mr. Osborne was so hoarse that he could scarcely be heard at times. After his speech he was carried out to a cab hordering on collapse. Mr. Osborne did not begin to speak until the Mayor finished, at 11:05. He pledged himself, as one of the first acts in office, if elected, to indict, try, and convict every man in New York who had been guilty of frauds in the insurance scandals.

In Mr. Cockran's speech he said a whole program of socialism was before the people, flaunted openly, and he demanded that a decisive verdict be rendered against it. Judge Herrick spoke against the pending constitutional amendments, while Controller Grout called Ivins and Hearst "two promising Williams. To this a man in the audience shouted "Two counterfeit Bills." Mrs. Ivins, wife of the Republican candidate was in a box with friends. Charles F. Murphy with Mrs. Murphy, sat in the McClellan box.

Mr. Harrison presented Bourke Cockran as the first speaker of the evening. Mr. Cockran said in part:

"I have found during my travels over the continent that everywhere this campaign was a subject of absorbing interest. Your Chairman has called attention to the election of 1886, in which it was my fortune to bear a somewhat active part. Then one part of the programme was unfolded which is placed before the people to-night in all of its fullness.

"Then there was a Socialistic suggestion, and that there was enough to unite the citizenship of New York in the defense of what they they believe to be the foundations of society. To-night there is more than a single suggestion. There is a whole programme of Socialism, naked and exposed, and the people of this municipality are challenged to give their verdict.

"We have before the community a programme which aims at enlisting support upon what your Chairman describes as a proposition to give everything free. I believe the exact proposition is to give 3-cent fares and give gas at 50 cents and to furnish other Government facilities in the same proportion. Now, I do not see any reason why if a gentleman can offer these commodities at 50 cents and 3 cents, he cannot offer them at 25 cents and 2 cents. [Laughter.]

"Nay, more, I do not see why he need impose any number of cents at all. I do not see why he should not give them all free. Nay, more, I do not see why he should not promise the people if they elect him, not merely to give them their gas free to use in their stoves, but to give them something to cook in the stoves. [Laughter,]

No Man Can Create Things.

"My friends in this programme, so remarkably attractive, we should always bear in mind that any man who proposes to give another something must find it somewhere. There is no power that I know of in this world by which things that are in it can be multiplied. No man can create things and give them away.

"If he is bent on giving them away, he must first find them, and he can only find them as the product of the labor of somebody else, and that means if he proposes to give anything to one person he must take the things that he gives from some other person who has produced them."

Mr. Cockran went on to show that Democracy and Socialism were absolutely hostile doctrines. Protection was one form of Socialism, he said, and the platform of the Hearst forces was another. Socialism, he said, was a blight upon the initiative of mankind.

"But you will be told," continued Mr. Cockran, "that this is a question of municipal ownership, and it is well that we should devote our attention to that. When a street railway, or a railroad corporation of any kind, or a gas company, or a water company or a telegraph company, is empowered to exercise its functions, its function is always a public function, and its discharge through a private agency is for the reason that the private agency is more efficient than the Government could be. While that greater efficiency is maintained, the private agency should be maintained. The moment the private agency ceases to be more efficient than the Government could be that moment it should be dispensed with.

Says Service is Poorer.

"There are many places abroad where the Government exercises all of these public utility franchises. I venture the assertion that there is not one of them that to-day can show as effective a service

SLAYER BESIEGED IN VAULT.

Kills Mayor of Illinois City and Another and Wounds Two.

Special to The New York Times.

CHENOA, Ill., Oct. 28.—At bay in a bank vault, William Le Duc, a murderer, held armed citizens at a distance from mid-afternoon until 9:30 o'clock. He had with him in the vault the body of one of his victims.

He killed Charles Nickel, Mayor of the town and Cashier of the Bank of Chenoa, and Hugh Jones, a laborer, and wounded two others. He then dragged Jones's body into the vault and fired at all who approached.

Le Duc came in from his farm this afternoon and went to the bank. He went to the desk of Mayor Nickel. The two men talked for a minute, and then Mr. Nickel jumped up with an exclamation of alarm. Le Duc drew a pistol and shot him dead.

Jones was in the bank waiting to see Mr. Nickel. He rushed upon Le Duc, and the murderer shot him down as he approached. Several persons rushed in on hearing the sound of the shots, and others hurried to the place, alarmed by the son of Mr. Nickel and another boy, who had seen the shooting and escaped out of a back door.

Le Duc, seeing the citizens coming, retreated within the opened steel vault, dragging the body of Jones after him. He took up a big book inside and placed it so that the door could not be closed on him, and caught a burglar lock chain inside so that it could not be opened. Then he defied those outside to come in and take him.

Within a short time more than fifty armed men had gathered at the bank, and plans were made to capture the murderer. At first a rush was attempted, some of the citizens firing into the vault, while others tried to push the book inside and close the door. Le Duc fired accurately on the rushing party, however, and two were wounded.

Although the door had been partly closed, it was decided that such a plan was too dangerous, and so Sheriff Edwards and others set about to find some other means of dislodging the man.

A large quantity of chloroform was procured, and cotton soaked with it was thrust with sticks into the vault. Cotton-soaked ammonia was used in the same way. Le Duc, however, was able to push out the cotton, and showed by his activity that the fumes had not seriously affected him.

Then electricians were sent for, and a wire was strung from the electric-light wires outside and carried to the vault. Through this it was planned to send a current that would render Le Duc helpless. Some of the men in the crowd objected, however, because they said it was not certain that Jones was dead, and they thought it was not worth while to kill him in order to get at the murderer, as it would be impossible for Le Duc to hold out more than a day or two. There seemed to be no doubt that Jones was dead, but the Sheriff did not care to take chances.

JEROME ODDS 10 TO 8.

The Public Anxious to Get Its Money Down—McClellan 3 to 1.

Jerome was again a favorite in the election betting yesterday. Offers of 10 to 8 on his election were made, and little Osborne money was to be found. The entrance of the public into the betting arena is more noticeable this year than for a long time. Hundreds of letters bearing checks for small amounts are received by the leading betting commissioners every day. Nine out of ten of the checks are ordered "up on Jerome at market odds."

"I never saw so many outsiders coming in before," said J. J. Judge yesterday. "They all want to back Jerome."

Judge put up $2,500 on Jerome against F. Schwed's $2,000. Charles Head & Co. bet $900 to $1,000 against Jerome. Anness & Newman bet $100 to $1,200 that Ivins would be first, Hearst second, and McClellan third. Bunnell & Co. bet $160 to $250 that Ivins would get more votes than Hearst.

McClellan money was more plentiful yesterday. Wassermann Brothers had $30,000 to bet against $10,000 on his victory. This firm recently bet 2 to 1 against Jerome, but is now offering 10 to 9 the other way.

BOODLER A PLAIN THIEF.

S. S. McClure Objects to Using Other Than the Old Term.

Special to The New York Times.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 28.—"If boodlers were called simply thieves, and grafting wes called stealing, much good would result," said S. S. McClure, the magazine publisher, to-day.

"Through the ages the meaning of the words 'thief' and 'steal' have never been tarnished," Mr. McClure continued. "The peculiar meaning of many words changes, but a thief has always been a man who stole. And the boodlers and grafters are simply thieves, and they merely steal. The machine in Philadelphia which combined with the gas company and set out to steal a hundred million dollars from that city were simply thieves, and what they did was plain stealing. If the words 'boodle' and 'graft' were put out of business and the words 'thief' and 'stealing' brought back it would be a great gain."

HIT BY MAGISTRATE'S AUTO.

Lad Saved from Death—Mr. Higginbotham Veered Into Curb.

To save a six-year-old boy from being injured Police Magistrate Higginbotham of Williamsburg nearly lost his own life yesterday while piloting his automobile. He is his own chauffeur.

Turning into Lee Avenue from Nostrand Avenue, he saw a truck approaching on which two boys were stealing a ride. The driver chased the boys off, and George Coburn, 6 years old, started across the roadway in front of the auto. The Magistrate steered toward the curb and struck a telegraph pole. Herman Meyer, an officer of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children, was with Magistrate Higginbotham, and both were thrown and stunned. The boy was hit by a front tire end fell, practically unhurt. The Magistrate suffered a gash on the right side of his head.

DALY'S NEW SHAW PLAY BARRED IN NEW HAVEN

"Mrs. Warren's Profession," Shown Once, Then Stopped.

TOWN IN AN UPROAR OVER IT

Mayor Says He Was Told "Tammany Was Expected to Pull the Thing Through in New York."

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Oct. 28.—The first night's performance was all New Haven could stand of Arnold Daly's production of "Mrs. Warren's Profession," by Bernard Shaw. There was an uproar here to-day over any further presentation of the piece from all quarters—the newspapers, the police, those who had seen the performence last night, and the public generelly. Because of this Mayor John P. Studley at noon directed Chief of Police Wrinn to revoke the license of the Hyperion Theatre as long es Daly was in town. The police then sent word to Mr. Daly that he could not present the play at the scheduled matinée this afternoon and to-night on the ground that "Mrs. Warren's Profession" was "grossly indecent and not fit for public presentation."

Mr. Daly, his manager, his press agent, and a squad of attorneys made every effort to get Mayor Studley to change his mind, but he wes obdurate. Mr. Dely left New Haven in high dudgeon late this afternoon, seying before he went: "New York will stand for the play if New Haven will not."

The Mayor, who was formerly Judge of the Common Pleas Court, frankly stated that he had taken his action because of the complaints he had received, and incidentally gave Manager Boone some fatherly advice as to the kind of shows New Haven would not stand for in the future.

"From what I have heard this play is grossly indecent and an insult to the New Haven public," said the Mayor.

"While I did not attend the opening performance last evening, I am well informed as to the general outline of the play, end in my mind it is an imposition on public decency. I shall not allow it to be presented again. That is final.

"The play is well written and well acted, but rotten. It was nothing that this city ought to license. Manager Boone had told me that the play ought to be allowed, that he expected some trouble in New York, but hoped that Tammany Hall would pull the thing through."

Manager Boone invited the Mayor and Chief Wrinn to witness the performance this afternoon and asked that they defer any contemplated action until they had seen the play and had personal knowledge of it. Neither would accept.

Mr. Daly was beside himself when he heard of the Mayor's order. He made every effort to have the play go on again, even offering to furnish bonds. Senator Reynolds of New York, who is interested in the play, also telephoned an offer of bonds, but the Mayor said it wasn't a matter of bonds. New Haven, he said, simply wouldn't stand for the show. Mr. Daly was with the Mayor for a large part of this afternoon at the Mayor's club, but could meke no impression on him. Mr. Daly gave orders for the dismissal of his company until Monday night at the Garrick Theatre in New York, and went to his hotel.

Mr. Daly was asked what he had to say in response to the charges that his play was immoral and should not be allowed on the stage. His eyes flashed angrily.

"It is perfect nonsense," he said, with disgust. "When the first performance is given in the Garrick Theatre in New York on Monday there will be ladies and gentlemen there who, I know, represent the best society in New York and would not for a moment countenance anything that was in the least immoral. Is that not enough? I have no patience with the charges. I am perfectly willing to go into any courtroom and argue with Anthony Comstock, or any one else, for hours on the question, and show that he knows absolutely nouing about immorality, or, for that matter, morality. He may know about potatoes or tomatoes or something of that kind, but that is all."

New Haven papers this evening are severe in their condemnation of "Mrs. Warren's Profession."

The New Haven Leader says it is "the most shockingly immoral dialogue ever publicly repeated" and that "the words, suggestions—the whole rotten mess of immoral suggestions—have no place on a public platform."

The New Haven Register says to-night: "The play itself is fit for publication only as a document for the sociologist and reformer, and even the most ardent of Mr. Shaw's admirers cannot plead that as a justification for putting it in dramatic form. Acted, it is incredibly worse. The full force of the utterance and gestures only add to its vulgarity and the necessity of acting up to the parts makes it equally repulsive, one would imagine, both to those who live without and to those who live within the world it describes. On these facts alone its pretended value of moral purpose must rest: To ask a hearing for it on the time-worn plea of artistic realism would be simply grotesque. The play drew last night, in a large part, the type of audience that it was seeking to reprove, and their behavior indicated that they went away more pleased and amused than rebuked. The fatuous sophistry, by which Mrs. Warren defended her conduct to her daughter, was greedily observed and approved of by an element that clearly wished to believe in it. A spectator at last night's performance who failed to note and be impressed by this quality of the audience, must have been densely ignorant of human nature.

"After 'Candida,' 'You Never Can Tell,' 'Captain Bressbound's Confession,' and other plays, admirers of Mr. Shaw cannot but be disappointed to see his undeniable talents used for a play of this sort—at least they must regret its being put on the stage.

"Distinction may have to be drawn sherply as to plays that are to be read and plays that are to be acted, but such a play as 'Mrs. Warren's Profession' cannot under any circumstances be given before a mixed audience. For the good of the stage and those sincere supporters of it who can distinguish between dramatic worth for its own sake and dramatic worth with mere nastiness and sensationalism added to it, whether with sincerity of purpose or as a drawing card, we wish the play a speedy exit from the boards, here and elsewhere."

DALY SELECTS A JURY.

Willing to Risk Jail If Dramatic Critics Favor His Play.

"My ultimatum is," said Arnold Daly last night when he had returned to the Garrick after his experience in New Haven, "that I will leave the question of presenting 'Mrs. Warren's Profession' to the dramatic critics of the New York newspapers. If they say on Tuesday

MAYOR DUNNE TO MORGAN.

Asks About Traction Rumor and Gets Denial of It.

CHICAGO, Oct. 28.—Mayor Edward F. Dunne wrote a letter to J. Pierpont Morgan to-day, calling attention to statements attributed to Mr. Morgan that the "Chicago traction question has been settled."

The Mayor said that gentlemen of the standing and importance of Mr. Morgan are not in the habit of making rash or unreliable statements; that if the traction question had been settled, it was a surprise to 2,000,000 persons in Chicago and of great importance to them. The Mayor wished to be informed when and where the settlement was made, who represented the traction interests in that settlement, and who represented the city; how the settlement was arrived at, and what methods were used to settle it without bringing it to the attention of the City Executive. He also desired to be informed as to the terms and conditions of settlement.

The letter was sent to Mr. Morgan at the Auditorium Annex, being carried to Mr. Morgan's room by James Donobue, a policeman stationed in the Mayor's office, and received by Mr. Morgan's private secretary.

The message came out of the sanctum that there wes no answer. Ten minutes afterward Mr. Morgan was on his way to luncheon at the Chicago Club. He declared he had nothing to say in explanation.

The following reply was received from Mr. Morgan by the Mayor:

The Hon. E. F. Dunne:

Dear Sir: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this date, and to same reply that the statement you refer to es having been accredited to me in a reported interview that "the traction question is settled," is absolutely without foundation, and I need hardly add thet I fully understand that there has been no settlement of the traction question. Very respectfully yours.

GIRL STOLEN FROM SCHOOL.

Special to The New York Times.

CALIFON, N. J., Oct. 28.—Mrs. Theodore Miller of this place has asked the police to search for her daughter Clara, 13 years old, who disappeared from the public school at Leamington yesteroay.

A veiled woman called at the school and asked to see Clara. The Principal, suspecting nothing, had the girl called, and she was sent to meet the stranger in the school vestibule. The moment the girl was within reach, the woman hurried her to a carriage standing near and drove away. Persons who were near say the driver of the carriage wore a mask.

Mrs. Miller was notified at once. She started out in the hope of overtaking the carriage, but when she went into her purse for money to pay her carfare at the station she discovered that she had lost $230. She was unable to take the train, and the pursuit was abandoned.

Mrs. Miller is the wife of Dr. Theodore Miller. They live apart, and the girl has been in her mother's custody.

MOB CHASES MOTORMAN.

He Flees When His Car Runs Down a Man and Woman.

It required the efforts of three policemen to rescue a motorman from the hands of an angry mob at Eightieth Street and Amsterdam Avenue yesterday, after his car had knocked down a man and woman. Arthur E. Tike and his wife of 202 West Seventy-ninth Street were crossing the street when a grocer's wagon, driven by two boys, bore down upon them at a rapid rate. Mr. Tike drew back to avoid the wagon, pulling his wife with him. As he did so he stepped directly in front of a north-bound Amsterdam Avenue car. Both he and his wife were thrown to the ground, Mrs. Tike being dragged beneath the front platform for some distance.

When the motorman, Patrick Stanton, stopped the car and saw the man and woman in the street, he grabbed the controller handle off the car and started to run up the avenue. A crowd was soon in pursuit, and at Eighty-second Street the motorman was surrounded. He was being roughly handled when the police arrived.

To add to all of the excitement some one —who could not be discovered—turned in a fire alarm. Mr. and Mrs. Tike were sent to their home. Their injuries were slight.

More Bank Shortages.

PASSAIC, N. J., Oct. 28.—The depositors' books in the closed Lujanovitz banks were compared to-day with the ledger. The books show $63,656, and the ledger accounts call for $60,738, a shortage of $2,918, in addition to the other shortages discovered by the examiners. All the books have not been examined.

A petition was sent to Judge Cross at Elizabeth to-day to have Samuel Weinberger removed as receiver in bankruptcy. It is said that Lujanovitz has property enough to make up the shortages.

BRIDE IN AN ASYLUM, BROTHERS TAKE HER

Albert V. D. Reid Demands Wife's Release from Bloomingdale.

MARRIED ONLY THREE DAYS

Ex-Captain of British Hussars Says Delano Brothers Beat Him, Then Kidnapped Their Sister.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Oct. 28.—Albert V. Deane Reid, formerly an officer in the Seventh British Hussars, got an order from Judge Platt here to-day directing the authorities of Bloomingdale Asylum to produce Mrs. Sarah Anne L. Delano Reid, his bride of three days, in court on Monday.

Mr. Reid declares in his petition that his wife confined in the asylum against her will. He charges that she was stolen from him the day following the wedding by her brothers, Victor, Clarence, and Frederick Delano, after they hed assaulted and beaten him.

The case comprises many sensational features. The Delano brothers and Mrs. Reid are wealthy and live near Mamaroneck. It is asserted that the bride tried to poison herself with carbolic acid while being taken to the asylum by her brothers.

The bride is twenty-three years old, is wealthy, and is an art student. She is a daughter of the late Victor Delano and a granddaughter of the late Merceau Delano.

Mr. Reid was the manager of the Cherry stock farm, owned by Mrs. Reid's three brothers, Victor, Frederick, and Clarence Delano, at Quaker Ridge, near Mamaroneck-on-the-Sound.

Both Reid and his bride were great lovers of horseback riding, and it was while she was taking lessons from him that they fell in love with each other.

Mr. Reid says he was secretly married to Miss Delano in New York on Oct. 25. The marriage was performed by the Rev. De Witt Thompson at 106 East Eighty-sixth Street, and one of the witnesses was the minister's wife. They spent the night in New York, and on the following day returned to Mamaroneck, but found none of the brothers at home at the Cherry stock farm.

The brothers got the first news of the wedding from a servant on the estate. On the night following the wedding Mr. Reid and his bride drove to the Mamaroneck station of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad to meet Frederick Delano, whom they intended to inform of their marriage.

"Instead of meeting one brother," said Mr. Reid, "all three brothers jumped off the train and came over to the carriage where my wife was sitting. She told one of them that we had been married. Before she could say anything more Fred struck me in the neck and knocked me down. My wife screamed and tried to get out of the carriage, but Clarence pushed her back and held her. When I arose Victor made a dash at me and landed two blows on my face. At the same time Fred struck me again, and then Victor seized me by the throat and knocked my head against the platform, rendering me almost insensible.

"Fred and Victor jumped into the carriage where my wife was being held and drove away. As the carriage was driven away I regained my feet and ran after it. Then Fred seized the whip and lashed me in the face. The horses were whipped into a run and soon disappeared with my wife screaming at the top of her voice for me to come and help her."

After leaving the Mamaroneck station the carriage containing Mrs. Reid and her brothers was driven at breakneck speed toward the Bloomingdale Asylum. On the way over they stopped at Cherry Farm, where it is believed that Mrs. Reid got a bottle of carbolic acid. She was then taken to the asylum five miles away. Just as she was being taken from the carriage she suddenly drew the viel of acid and drank the contents.

She was severely burned by the acid, and it is feared that her face will be permanently disfigured.

Dr. Samuel B. Lyon, Superintendent of Bloomingdale Asylum, refused to-day to discuss the case It is known, however, that Mrs. Reid was put in the institution by her brothers in September, 1904. She was released on parole last December.

The kidnapping of the bride and the attack on Mr. Reid just as a large number of commuters were alighting at the Mamaroneck station created a sensation. Word was telephoned to the Mamaroneck police, but the Delanos managed to escape before the officers arrived.

Mr. Reid declares that his bride is not insane. She is prominent in Mamaroneck and New Rochelle society. In addition to being an expert whip she is a splendid amateur tennis player, being a member of the Siwanoy Club of New Rochelle. She is a graduate of Mrs. Hazen's school at Pelham Manor. Recently she has been taking lessons in art in New York.

Mr. Reid has instructed his lawyer, John M. Digny, to bring suits for heavy demages against the three Delano brothers for assaulting him and kidnapping his bride. Mr. Reid says he served with the British Army in India and Egypt as a Captain. He has lived in the United States six years and came to Mamaroneck from Chicago, where he ran a riding academy. He declares that he is the partner of the Delanos in operating the Cherry Stock Farm.

MAMARONECK, Oct. 28.—Victor Delano, one of the three brothers who put their sister in the Bloomingdale Asylum, was seen this evening at Cherry Farm. He said:

"The name of the man who married my sister is Albert V. Deane-Reid. He is an Englishman and is about 45 years old. My sister is in her twenty-third year. Reid is a veterinary surgeon. He and I have been in partnership and have been running a stock farm. Reid and my sister were married on Tuesday in New York City by the Rev. Mr. Thomas. They came back here the same day. I was here at the time, and my suspicions were aroused.

"On Wednesday I went to New York and the next day came back with my two brothers, Clarence and Frederick. Reid and my sister knew that I was returning and they drove from the farm to the Mamaroneck station to meet me. I and my brothers took our sister away from Reid and conveyed her to the Bloomingdale Asylum. She was committed to the asylum about two years ago and a year ago was released on parole. I have had to take her back there once a month to report, and Reid has on several occasions accompanied us to the asylum.

"Reid married my sister because he thought that she was worth $50,000. As a matter of fact, my sister has not sufficient capital to maintain herself and is supported by relatives. She has no interest in the farm."

Mr. Delano denied that he or his brother assaulted Reid, but several hackmen at the Mamaroneck station bore out Reid's statement.

FRENCH CABINET'S POSITION.

Premier Rouvier Will Have to Explain His Foreign Policy.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES. [Copyright, 1905.]

PARIS, Oct. 28.—The French Chamber meets again on Monday after the Summer recess, and it is expected that M. Rouvier, the Premier, will quickly be called upon for a statement as to his foreign policy.

If he should fail to make clear that France does not seek entangling alliances, but will maintain the status quo in a purely pacific spirit, the chances of a Ministerial crisis are considerable.

The temper of the majority of the Deputies is most pacific, and they will, it is believed, make plain to the Cabinet that even the entente cordiale must not be exaggerated into a standing menace against Germany.

CASSIDY'S AUTO BURNED.

Chauffeur Injured Trying to Save Borough President's Machine.

An automobile owned by Joseph Cassidy, President of Queens Borough, was damaged by fire last night to the extent of $2,000. It was the mechine in which Mayor McClellan has been doing his campaigning. Robbins tried to smother the blaze and was burned about the face and hands.

The machine is a wreck.

Mrs. Heever was formerly Miss Nancy Carnegie. She lived at Lloyds Neck, near Huntington, L. I., at one time. When she married the coachman Mr. Carnegie lent his approval of the match by saying that it was better to marry an honest coachman one loved than an impecunious nobleman one did not love.

Mrs. Heever haa bought seventy-eight acres of the Silas Albertson farm at Albertson, near Roslyn. The estate is to be used as a country seat by the Heevers.

RUSSIANS READY TO DEPOSE CZAR

Revolutionists Will Send an Ultimatum to Him.

TEMPORARY GOVERNMENT

Political Parties at Moscow Have Formed One.

RULER STILL OBSTINATE

Witte Has Been Pleading with Him for Two Days—Strike Movement Spreads to Asia.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES. [Copyright, 1905.]

PARIS, Oct. 28.—That a general strike in Russia would be the first step toward a revolution and that preparations for a strike on an enormous scale were in progress was known among the Russian revolutionists here some weeks ago.

I now learn from Russian revolutionary sources that the fullest confidence is felt that the revolution will attain its aim, which is the establishment of a National Assembly and a responsible Government in place of the meaningless "Constitution" promised by the Emperor.

Independent Governments will be established in Moscow and St. Petersburg, and an ultimatum will then be addressed to the Czar. If he refuses to accept it his deposition will be proclaimed.

At first it was intended to offer the Presidency of the Provisional Revolutionary Government to Count Witte, but since the peace negotiations he has come to be looked upon as a Reactionary and the revolutionary committees are undecided as to the choice of a substitute.

MOSCOW, Oct. 28.—At a meeting to-day of delegates representing the different political parties it was decided to unite in the establishment of a Government and to act independently of the imperial authorities.

The city was in darkness last night and to-day the electric light works were shut down. The shops, theatres, Bourse, banks, and schools are closed and the streets are deserted save for the troops and streams of workmen. Every Government spirit shop is closed. The banks, Treasury, Post Office, and Governor General's offices are surrounded by troops.

The Board of Trade has petitioned against the state of siege. Several meetings of strikers were dispersed by Cossacks to-day.

Prices are very high. Water is 20 cents a pail.

The utmost alarm prevails owing to rumors that workmen are marching on the town from the factory district.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 28.—Most startling news comes from Moscow, where all the political parties have joined in a resolution to set up a provisional Government.

The Provisional Government has already been organized, and is waiting to exercise its powers.

Reports that a provisional Government has been established in St. Petersburg are untrue.

Two Moscow merchants arrived here this afternoon in a motor car. They report that Moscow is in an almost frenzied state of agitation.

Telegraphic and telephonic communication between thie city and Moscow ceased this afternoon. Later telephonic communication with the ancient capital was resumed.

The strike at Moscow is general. The people are defying all prohibitions and are swarming to the university and other meeting places. The university is barricaded against the troops.

Day after day passes without the promulgation of Russia's new Governmental organ—a responsible Ministerial Cabinet to bring order out of the present chaos. Count Witte, to whom all factions look to assume the Premiership, has spent almost the entire time during the past two days at Peterhof urging the Emperor to grant conditions in connection with his appointment which his Majesty is unwilling to agree to.

Upon his return to St. Petersburg to-night Count Witte announced that the Cabinet project, which has been lying signed for three days on the Emperor's table, would not be promulgated to-morrow, intimating thereby that his programme, which is known to include a species of Constitution involving the granting of four liberties—freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, freedom of the press, and freedom of the person—has not been accepted.

It is felt that the delay cannot be long protracted and that it is only a question of hours until the Emperor confides the fortunes of the dynasty and the Government to Count Witte's hands.

In the meantime the situation is passing from bad to worse, with matters at the summit in a state of unstable equilibrium. The chiefs of state are at a loss how to act, and the revolutionists, encouraged by the inactivity of the Government, are growing bolder and more insistent in the demands made in their speeches.

It is true that there has been no disorder in St. Petersburg and that Gen. Trepoff, Russia's other strong man, has taken every measure to put down an uprising in its incipiency, but hs has not felt sure enough of his position to act boldly with regard to the revolutionary meetings at the university, and has contented himself with issuing warnings which, not having been enforced, are taken by the agitators as evidence of lack of backbone.

As before yesterday's giant meeting at the university, it was again announced to-day that further meetings there would not be permitted, but nevertheless the collegs portals were open to-night, and the hospitality of the university was extended to a strong group of lawyers and other professional men, one of whose orators, referring to the old Russian folk legend that the world is supported on the backs of three whales, said that the autocracy rested on three cetacea—money, the army, and the loyalty of the people, but that Russia was now bankrupt, the moral sympathy of the people was alienated, and the army alone remained true. And this, he predicted, would not be for long. Another speaker openly preached terrorism and advocated "making an example" of a number of high personages.

Trepoff a Convert.

Count Witte's ally in the stupendous task he is about to undertake will be Gen. Trepoff, who, though he all his life has been an instrument for repression, and though he has twice escaped attempts to execute the Terrorists' sentences of death, has come to realize that the old order of things is changing and giving place to a new, and is now a genuine convert to the policy of giving the people a share in the Government.

Should Witte and Trepoff now fail, the best opinion is that nothing will save the present Government from complete ruin. Many shrewd observers believe that Witte comes too late.

Life in St. Petersburg is that of a city under siege, with an uprising threatened from within, almost completely isolated, and its scanty store of provisions being rapidly exhausted. A condition bordering on panic prevails. The garrison, however, is overwhelmingly large. Gen. Trepoff has 50,000 troops under his command, which are distributed in every section of the city. There is scarcely a block without its military patrol. Infantry and cavalry are quartered in courtyards all over town, the barracks are crowded, and the watch fires of the soldiers who are bivouacking in the streets light up the thoroughfares, where electricity has been extinguished.

The Nevsky Prospect, this city's main avenue, which last night was in darkness, to-night presents a weird appearance. A powerful searchlight mounted at the Admiralty illuminates the middle of the avenue with a blinding light, leaving the sidewalks in darkness. Drivers in the roadway, dazzled by the glare, were unable to see whers they were going, and the throngs in obscurity on the sidewalks were in but little better plight. There was constant confusion, which was augmented during the evening by an attempt by the Cossacks and gendarmes to clear the sidewalks.

200,000 Idle in the Capital.

Two hundred thousand men are idle. Workmen's meetings held throughout the city to-day unanimously favored continuing the strike. Business is completely suspended. The lawysrs in the afternoon stopped all the business of the courts.

The cable is still operating, although the Post Office is closed. The report that the Finnish Railroad had stopped was incorrect. Trains left St. Petersburg this morning.

The Strike Committee, which is at the helm of the movement here, is well organized. Its directions are obeyed unhesitatingly by the workers. The committee consists of representativcs of the Social Democrats, the two factions of which have settled their differences and are working in harmony. Outsiders ars not admitted to the sessions of the committee, which continue constantly and which up the present have been held in the Technological Institute, the Director of which has received a warning from Gsn. Trepoff not to permit them any longer.

A prominent member of the committee said to-day that there was little probability of an armed uprisnig in St. Petersburg. He said:

"We have arms, but not enough to give any hope of success so long as the army is loyal. There are perhaps 6,000 or 8,000 rifles in St. Petersburg, as well as revolvers."

One of the members of the committee is daily advocated attacking the Arsenal, but his comrades opposed violence.

The strikers sent a deputation to the Town Council last night to demand that the city cease paying and foraging the gendarmes and police, and also demanding municipal regulation of the prices of food in order that the poor may buy provisions. The Town Councilors promised to consider the demands. Rations for ten days have been distributed at all the barracks.

The strikers evidently have some funds, but whence they are derived is a mystery. According to rumors, the Moscow millionaire merchants who have been supporting the Constitutionalists, have made large contributions to continue the strike under the belief that the Government will be forced to surrender.

Some Cities Quite Isolated.

Communication with some places in the interior is entirely interrupted. Such news as is received shows that similar conditions exist all over the empire—work stopped, no newspapers printed, schools closed, and the business life of the people suspended. The cry of the masses is always the same—political liberty. The military everywhere are in possession, the inhabitants are terror-stricken, and many cities are in darkness.

The populations of some towns are growing more violent, and reports of disorders are arriving in increasing numbers, but the attempts of the strike leaders to hold the people in hand thus far have been generally successful.

The railroad strike has spread even to Central Asia, where the Trans-Caspian and Orenberg-Tashkend lines are tied up. The strike on the Trans-Siberian Railrond is interfering with the return of troops from the Far East. The Thirteenth Corps was ordered to entrain yesterday, but was unable to start.

In spite of the fact that the revolutionists apparently have the Government almost by the throat, persons well informed as to the situation are of the opinion that the present conditions cannot long eadure. The proletariat, they say, will be the first to feel the pinch of hunger. There are intimations that the strike organization may next week issue a proclamation that the strike has served its purpose and shown its strength to the people, and directing the workers to resume their occupations, but to be prepared for another and greater demonstration if necessary.

35,000 TROOPS IN WARSAW.

Socialists Shot Near Pabianice—Lodz Like a Dead City.

WARSAW, Oct. 28.—Thirty thousand infantry and 5,000 cavalry, with 98 guns, have been collected in this city. Martial law is to be declared at once. The streets are filled with patrols.

It is rumored that strikers are marching on the city from the provinces.

By order of the Governor General the gates of Warsaw are closed at dark, house doors are locked at 5 P. M., coffee houses and bakeshops close at 5, second-class restaurants at 9, and first-class restaurants at 10.

The revolutionnry leaders are reported to have distributed thousnds of revolvers to the strikers.

The only way of leaving Warsaw now is by the steamboats down the Vistula to the Prussian frontier.

The Central Committee of the Social Democrats has scattered leaflets demanding the right to elect a law-making assembly instead of the proposed National Assembly.

The military at noon dispersed a meeting of the employes of the Vienna Railroad, who had gathered to discuss the situation.

A battalion of engineers controls the telephone service.

The employes of the suburban railroads and suburban street railroads joined the strikers this morning.

Cossacks arrested 120 Polish Socialists at a Jewish Bund meeting in a forest near Pabianice, in the Government of Petrokoff, this morning.

When the news reached Pabianice workmen attempted to rescue their comrades. The troops fired and one workman was killed and twenty-etght were wounded.

LODZ, Oct. 28.—The town is threatened with famine. Coal is lacking and the streets are dark and deserted.

The shops are closed and no newspapers are issued. Infantry are camping in the streets. All traffic has stopped.

The general strike continues.

BERLIN, Oct. 28.—A dispatch to the Lokal Anzeiger from Warsaw, timed 1:20 P. M., says that troops have occupied all the houses in Chmielna Street, where a meeting of strikers had been called, with instructions to prevent the assemblage.

GIRLS SHOT AT ODESSA.

City Practically Isolated—Citizens to Organize Militia.

LONDON, Oct. 28.—A dispatch to a news agency from Odessa says that a serious affray occurred this morning at the gymnasium between students of both sexes and Cossacks, who interfered in a meeting. Nearly 100 students were wounded and one was killed. The wounded include seventeen girls.

A special meeting of the City Council of Odessa has expressed sympathy with the popular movement.

A general strike of all ths industries at Odessa is expected to-night. The military have redoubled their precautions. All the streets are strongly patrolled by cavalry and infantry.

ODESSA, Oct. 28.—This city is practically isolated so far as railroad travel is concerned. Communication by telegraph is alone possible. The price of foodstuffs has increased enormously.

The employes of all the banking houses and newspapers and the entire staff of the city schools are on strike. The offices are guarded by troops.

The citizens have decided to organize a municipal militia for self-protection.

The report that a mutiny has occurred on board the Russian battleship Catherine II. is incorrect. That vessel has arrived here. The Black Sea fleet is on the way to Trebizond.

SEVASTOPOL, Oct. 28.—A great political demonstration took place in the public square here to-day. Orators harangued the crowds, who later paraded the streets singing revolutionary songs and scattering proclamations.

The troops gradually pressed the crowds into the outskirts of the town.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 28.—The sudden and unexplained arrival of the Catherine II. at Odessa while the remainder of the fleet is still cruising at sea has revived the rumors of a mutiny on board that battleship.

BOMB THROWN AT GOMEL.

Police Chief Badly Hurt—Reval Buildings Looted and Burning.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 28.—Strikers at Gomel to-day threw a bomb at the Chief of Police while he was driving through the principal throughfare. His carriage was wrecked and the chief and two Cossacks who were escorting him were badly injured.

While Reval was in darkness last night riotsrs sacked the stores and later marching crowds set fire to the spirit shops, the theatre, and other buildings. Barricades were thrown up in various sections, and the buildings wers still in flames this morning. Crowds armed with rifles and revolvers prevented the Firs Department from extinguishing the flames at the theatre. Eight persons were killed and forty wounded in the rioting last night.

There is a general strike of every class at Tiflis. Business is at a standstill. The people ars nervous.

There was a great demonstration at Kharkoff at the burial to-day of the fifteen victims of ths recent rioting, but ths students and workmen preserved order. The procession marched through the streets without any clergy, singing the "Marseillaise" and dirge music. At the cemetery revolutionary speeches were made over the graves, which were adorned with red flags. The troops and police were powerless to interfere. Subsequently martial law was declared.

Kieff is in darkness, no mail has been received for days, and the people are the prey to the wildest rumors. Intense excitement prevails. The newspaper publishers have unanimously decided to cease publication until they are allowed to print the truth. The station is guarded by troops with machine guns.

A mob broks all the windows of the railroad station at Briansk to-day and drove out the telegraph operators.

The authorities at Riga have closed the spirit shops and placed them under military guard. The strike at Riga is general. Cossacks to-day dispersed promenaders in the city gardens.

Simbirsk is in the possession of the military.

No mail has been received at Dorpat for three days. The people are in a state of semi-panic.

The Municipal Council at Kremenchug has petitioned the Government to remove the Cossacks from that city.

Urgent appeals have reached the British Embassy here from Ekaterinoslav and Grozny, where large English works are threatened.

At Rostoff-on-Don mobs of demonstrators are parading the streets and hoodlums are pillaging isolated houses and stores. Four persons have been killed by mobs. The schools are closed and shipping has ceased.

FOREIGNERS PANIC-STRICKEN.

Embassies Besieged with Inquiries—Americans Leave Russia.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 28.—The foreign residents here are extremely nervous, and have begun to besiege their Embassies with inquiries as to what will be done to protect them in case the mob gets the upper hand. Requests for protection are also reaching the Embassies from the interior. This is especially the case with the British Embassy. Large British property interests are asking for military protection.

All such requests are being sent immediately to the Russian Foreign Office, but it is realized that the Government could give little special protection to foreigners. Should an armed uprising come the foreigners will have to take their chances with the native population.

A number of Americans have written to Chargé d'Affaires Eddy asking him whether they had better try to leave the country. The Embassy's courier, who is in Berlin, has been instructed to come here immediately by boat, and in the meantime Mr. Eddy is getting out dispatches by the English courier via Helsingfors. Many Americans who were here, including Charles R. Flint, have temporarily gone abroad.

The feeling generally at the Embassies is one of extreme tension and nervousness, but there is manifest unwillingness to prophesy the result of the outbreak.

If the worst should come warships could enter the Neva to protect foreigners. Beyond preliminary arrangements for the dispatch of Embassy mails by boat, however, no steps have yet been taken.

STRIKES ON ASIAN RAILWAYS.

Employes of Central Asian and Trans-Baikal Lines Quit Work.

ASHKABAD, Russian Trans-Caspian Territory, Oct. 28.—The employes of the Central Asian Railroad have struck.

IRKUTSK, Oct. 28.—The railway men on the trans-Baikal line have struck.

WILLING TO LEND TO RUSSIA.

Foreign Bankers Have Not Broken Off the Loan Negotiations.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 28.—A report that the negotiations for a new Russian loan have been broken off proves to be incorrect. The contract is practically ready for signature, but the time of issue has not been decided. The contract provides for a loan of $250,000,000, covering a period of forty years, at 4 per cent. The price is about 91.

The Government evidently does not want the new issue to be placed on the foreign markst inopportunely, and the fixing of the time of issue may therefore involve further delay.

TAMMANY'S BIGGEST RALLY OF CAMPAIGN

as we can show in the City of New York.

"Now, you have read a great deal lately about the performances in some insurance companies, and everybody says that was graft. Well, so it was. But you have observed that nobody has talked of indicting anybody. Have you observed that where this graft amounts to millions no person has been called upon to answer for it?"

"Jimmy Osborne will call them to account!" shouted some one in ths audience.

After saying that he did not mean his remarks to be taken as for or against any candidate, Mr. Cockran continued:

"Why is it that we find the community astounded at the revelations which have been mads, but without apparently any remedy to suggest? It is because this evil is deeper than we have appreciated. Its root is to be found in this system of embodying a plan of plunder into the law itself. [Applause.] Some people realize that it is possible to make money other than by the labor exerted upon the bosom of the earth. There is but one safety from all this corruption. We must find it at ths very dawn of creation.

"It is embodisd in that curse that was laid upon the first man when hs was told that in the sweat of his brow he must eat his bread. That is the whole sum of the Democratic gospel. Every man mus bs entitled to all that he can make, to eat all the bread that he can fashion by the sweat of his brow. He must not touch one crumb that is made in ths sweat of another man's brow. [Great applause.] All the corruption, all the crime, all the violence, all the folliss of man or nation can be attributed to attempts to violate this fundamental doctrins of creation and Democracy."

Mr. Cockran said the citizens of New York had the best opportunity they had had in years of presenting to the people of the country a candidate and a platform upon which "honest men everywhere can stand, and whom honest men everywhere can support loyally and enthusiastically."

"That platform," said Mr. Cockran, "provides that the Government shall have control of all of its public utilities, administering them through private agencies or by the Government itself according as a greater efficiency may be secured for the benefit of the people, holding that Government within the lines marked by individualism and Democracy as against Socialism, however disguised. That platform is occupied by a candidate who has administered the affairs of this great city in a manner which has challenged the approval of all men."

Mr. Cockran then made a reference to the fight over the District Attorneyship. He said:

"Now, my friends, I have said that I have no interest and don't intend to taks any part in the local struggles between candidates. But I can say this much. For my part, without any interest whatever in the outcome, without undertaking to express any opinion one way or another I do say this: That I am glad nothing has been dons which would look liks an attempt on the part of the Democratic Party to purchase the favor or the forbearance or the silence of any man." [Great cheering.]

A voice—"It's a good thing you came home."

"I desire to say this: That we are presenting here the record of an administration. We ask to be judged by it, and we rejoice in the fact that the judgment of the electorate must be recorded in the light of a vehement—I don't think I exaggerate it if I say a violent assault on it by an officer who has the power to uncover iniquity, if iniquity exists. [Great applause.]

Mr. Cockran concluded by saying that what was sadly needed in this country was an effective opposition. A triumph of the Democracy in the coming city election, he said, would give hope to the Democracy all over the country, and out of that hope would spring an effective opposition in the next Presidential campaign.

At the conclusion of Mr. Cockran's speech there was a tremendous demonstration.

Mr. Osborne began his speech by saying that he received in the mail this week a letter signed "Jerome Nominators."

"For some mysterious reason, which I think will be revealed before we proceed very far," said he, "their names are not disclosed.

"Now, I find in this letter the following question, which I appear here to-night to answer:

"'Has any one heard of a prominent life insurance official supporting Mr. Jerome for his re-election!' The letter continues:

This insurance question is to be an important one in the District Attorney's office; can any one doubt that those who diverted the savings of provident men, who seek to protect the future of their dear onees, are anxious for the defeat of Mr. Jerome and for the election of one more complacent toward the crimes of the rich, one more susceptible to the influence of pull and price?

"I entirely agree with the Jerome nominators," continued Mr. Osborne, "in that the insurance question is one question of vital importance which will engage the attention of the District Attorney in the next administration, and I have no doubt that I can answer satisfactorily the question that has been put to me in the question that I have read, and now again I repeat the question:

"'Has any one heard of a prominent life insurance official supporting Mr. Jerome for his re-election?'

Says They All Clamor for It.

"I have heard of no life insurance officials or their lawyers, who have not been and are not now clamoring incessantly for his re-election."

Mr. Osborne then said that the original document inviting signatures to ths Jerome petition and headed "The Jerome Nominators" was signed by about forty names.

"The first name I find signed to this document," said he, "is that of Edwin D. Adams, a Director in the Mercantile Trust Company. You will remember that the Mercantile Trust Company is the holder of what has been denominated in all the newspapers in this town as 'The Yellow Dog Fund.'

"Looking down the list, I find the name of William B. Hornblower, a Trustee of the New York Life Insurance Company, permanent official counsel of that company, and also personal counsel of James W. Alexander, the late President of the Equitable Life.

"I find the name of John G. Milburn, personal counsel of John R. Hegaman, President of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company."

Mr. Osborne said he congratulated himself that the Jerome nominators had askcd the question with which he began his speech. Of his rival he said:

Says the Trail Grows Cold.

"He declared once he was willing to follow a trail, though it did go into the very seats of the mighty. I have been watching him for four years, and I never saw that trail go anywhere much further than into some poor unfortunate gambling place or something of that sort; but whenever the trail got anywhere near the seats of the mighty, for some reason or other the hounds were called off. I intend to follow it to its legitimate end, even though it does follow right into the seats of the mighty insurance companies."

Mr. Osborne then returned to his list:

"The next name I find on the list is that of Isaac N. Seligman, a reputable gentleman; not only a signer of this 'Jerome Nominators' but also the Treasurer of Jerome's campaign fund and a brother-in-law of Jacob H. Schiff, the very biggest fish in the whole of this insurance pond."

Other names, he said, were those of James Speyer, a Director in the Mutual Life; Francis Lynde Stetson, personal counsel of George W. Perkins, financial manager of the New York Life Insurance Company, and Oscar S. Straus, of whom he said:

"He is honored for his charactsr whsrever the English language is spoken. But nevertheless he is a Director of the New York Life Insurance Company.

"Thus far we have Directors in the New York Life and in the Mutual Life, and we have the personal counsel of the Equitable Life, of the Metropolitan Life, and of the New York Life, not merely signing Jerome's petition, but inviting others to do so."

Of the fact that those who issued the appeal did not sign their names Mr. Osborne said:

"Was this intended to be a fraud perpetrated by somebody, and was that fraud perpetrated with the knowledge and consent of William Travers Jerome?"

Of the question contained in the lstter received by Mr. Osborne he said:

"It is like the act of a pickpocket, who when he gets the watch falls into the line of the people who are trying to find the thief, and is the first one to cry 'Stop thief!'

The speaker then took un the nominating petition itlself. On it he said he found the names of Mr. Schiff and of Mr. Schiff's son-in-law, Felix A. Warburg, a member of Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

Among other signers, said the speaker, were Paul D. Cravath, Mr. Schiff's personal counsel; Frederic R. Coudert, a Director in the Equitable Trust Company; George L. Rives, a Director in the Mercantile Trust Company; Benjamin A. Sands, a Director in the National Safe Deposit Company, and Adrian Iselin, Jr., a Trustee of the Mutual Life Insurance Company.

Mr. Osborne referred to the meeting at which Assistant District Attorney Rand replied to him.

William N. Cohen Was Chairman.

"They had to have a Chairman," said he, "and they had to have a Chairman of great dignity, of great learning, and, that being so, whom do you suppose they got? What would have more dignity and more learning than the Equitable Life Assurance Society itself? And so, at this Jerome meeting where Jerome through his friend Rand was defending his own reputation, there sat, as the Chairman of that meeting, William N. Cohen, the personal counsel of James W. Alexander, the lats President of the Equitable Life Assurance Society.

"And at the Carnegie Hall meeting. They must have somebody of learning, of dignity, of power and influence, and what better than the Metropolitan Lifs Insurance Company presiding over this mesting in the person of John G. Milburn, the personal counsel of its President, Mr. Hegaman."

Mr. Osborne took up one by one the names signed to a telegram asking Gov. Folk of Missouri to aid the Jerome campaign. After reading names already mentioned as signers of the Jeroms petition he spoke of Stewart L. Woodford, senior counsel for the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, and one of its Directors, and Adrian H. Joline, who, he said, was also personal counsel of James W. Alexander. To the circular sent around by members of ths Bar Association urging the election of Mr. Jerome, one of which circulars Mr. Osborne received, he found appended the names "of Joseph Larocque, a Director of the Morton Trust Company, whoss relations with the Mutual Life are now being investigated; B. Aymar Sands, a Director in the National Safe Deposit Company, and Mr. Cravath.

"Now, gentlemen, we havs seen that the answer to this question put to me by the Jerome nominators is extremely simple. I want it distinctly understood that I do not attribute to them any bad motivs for clamoring for Mr. Jerome's re-election, but I will say, in passing, that surely the counsel for these life insurance companies must know who is the best District Attorney to investigate their criminal transactions, if there are any."

"I charge seriously that, when the names of those nominators were not put down at the bottom of that paper asking the following question, 'Has any one heard of a prominent life insurance official supporting Mr. Jerome for his re-election?' a gross fraud was attempted to be perpetrated upon the voters of this county."

Mr. Osborne said he would like to publicly discuss the question with Mr. Jerome.

None for Osborne, He Says.

"Now, gentlemen, James W. Osborne can tell you one thing under his word of honor, that there is not a single Insurance Director, so far as he knows, or a single insurance lawyer, in favor of his election.

"Mr. Jerome says that his only reason for thinking that James W. Osborne is ths puppet of the boss is as follows:

I think too highly of Osborne to believe that if elected he will be unfaithful to the boss who created him. It is for this reason that I say I am running, not against Jim Osborne, but against Charles F. Murphy.

"If that is the code of Mr. Jerome, I will paraphrase it as follows: I think too highly of Jeroms to believe that, if elected, he will be unfaithful to the life insurance companies who are clamoring for his election. And it is for this reason that I say I am running not against William Travers Jerome, but against the insurance companies of the City and County of New York.

"Remember the names that I have been reading to you, and in that luminous light recall those solemn words of William Travers Jerome, not twenty-four hours ago:

"'Lives there a man on the face of God's earth so base that he would strike the hand of the man that tried to help him?'"

Mr. Osborne said that if this were Mr. Jerome's code it would be impossible for him to proceed against the New York Life Insurance Company, of which John Claflin, who, Osborne said, was a financial manager of Jerome's 1901 campaign, is a Director.

"And now," he continued, "allow me to see if the conduct of the insurance candidate does not exactly come up to his moral code." Mr. Osborne recalled that Gov. Higgins sent to Mr. Jerome the preliminary report on the investigation into the Equitable Life by Supt. Hendricks. This, said Osborne, was equivalent to an order to begin action.

"Said The New York Sun of June 24, 1905:

"Mr. Jerome will give the affairs of the Equitable a complete overhauling, and spare no one.

"And he did—the good man did.

Saw Harriman and Schiff.

"Putting on his hat, he went down to the office of Mr. Harriman, one of the gentlemen under investigation in insurance matters, and there he had a delightful conversation with Mr. Harriman, and Mr. Harriman then passes him over to the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and, having had a conversation there with Mr. Schiff, he returned to the District Attorney's office, called the reporters around him, held a specisl grand jury himself, and then announced his verdict that Schiff and Harriman wsre not guilty of any wrongdoing."

Mr. Osborne then read a number of newspaper clippings telling of Mr. Jerome's visits, one of which said that the rule forbidding cigarette smoking was suspended in Kuhn, Loeb & Co.'s office while the District Attorney was there.

"That is all. That is all that Jerome has ever done in this insurances scandal.

"Ah! I owe Mr. Jerome an apology. He did do something more. On Oct. 5 of this year, 1905—and this is a quotation from THE NEW YORK TIMES of Oct. 5, 1905, which paper is now supporting Mr. Jerome—'Mr. Jerome Says No Special Grand Jury for Insurance Now; Jerome Tells Justice Davy the Public is Too Much Excited.'

"I now read from the body of the article referring to this insurance scandal in his speech before Mr. Justice Davy:

There is a burning and eager desire that some one should be punished; that some one should be hurt for the things that have been done—things which the most candid man, the most temperate man, must say have been wicked, and wicked to a very great degree.

Then, said Osborne, the District Attorney asked that the June term be adjourned.

"Mr. Jerome is going around constantly, asking everybody up and down this town, 'Where did he get it?' Why does he not obsy the oath of office which he took as District Attorney of this county, and call upon the real, admitted criminals of this community, by means of the accusations of a Grand Jury, to atand before the bar of justice and tell where they got it?"

Mr. Osborne said that if Mr. Shearn were elected District Attorney he would be unable to distinguish between his public dutles and those as private counsel to Mr. Hearst.

In conclusion Mr. Osborne said:

"If I am elected to be District Attorney of this county, I solemnly promisc that I shall diligently inquire and true presentment make of all such matters and things as shall be given me in charge, the counsel of the people of this State, my fellows and my own, I shall keep secret, I shall present no person from envy, hatred, or malice, nor shall I leave any one unpresented through fear, favor, affectation, or reward, or hope thereof, but I shall present all things, truly as they come to my knowledge, according to the best of my understanding, so help me God."

Many Portraits of the Mayor.

There were lithographs of Mayor McClellan in profusion hung from the balconies, and a large banner portrait of him was suspended from the box in which membera of his family sat. The stage was decorated with American flags. In the centre of the stage was a large placard which could be easily read in all parts of the hall. Its titie was: "President Roosevelt on Slanderers." Then followed the following quotation from the President's speech at Atlanta on Oct. 20:

A man who on no grounds, or on insufficient grounds, attacks an honest and an upright man, whether in public or in private life, is himself corrupt. To accuse an honest man of being a thief is to gladden the heart of every thief in the Nation.

Before 8 o'clock the parquet, both galleries, and most of the boxes were occupied. Among the box holdera were Frederic R. Coudert, Payne Whitney, James W. Gerard, J. Ferris Simmons, and George C. Boldt. There were many women in the boxes and also in the body of the hall, including Mrs. Francis Burton Harrison.

When the band struck up "Tammany" there were wild cheers from the braves. Many of them rose to their feet and waved flags. When D Cady Herrick, Bourke Cockran, and Francis Burton Harrison came on the platform at 8:10 o'clock they received an enthusiastic greeting. Mr. Cockran had not been named as ons of those who would speak. It was not until 5 o'clock that he agreed to do so.

Was Elected as a Partisan.

"Two years ago," said Francis Burton Harrison, the Chairman of ths meeting, "we elected Mr. McClellan as a partisan, and he has been the most non-partisan Mayor we have ever had. Two years ago Mayor McClellan stood on this platform and promised an honest and efficient administration, and I call upon Heaven to witness that hs has mads good. [Cheers.]

"Mr. Ivins," said Mr. Harrison, "is but a voice crying in the wilderness in this campaign. A vots for him is worse than wasted. A vote for Ivins is a vote for Hearst.

"Odell is so busy in this campaign electing Republican Assemblymen that he has not even had time to make the acquaintance of Mr. Jerome. No Republican seriously expects Ivins to bs elected."

Herman Metz, candidate for Controller, was introduced, and thanked the audience for its reception. He promised a business administration of the Finance Department if elected.

Mayor McClellan entered the hall at 10:30, and was met by an enthusiastic demonstration the like of which seldom has been seen in this city. For twenty minutes the crowd shouted, wavved flags, and applauded. Ths band played repeatedly, horns were blown, and about every sort of noise-making device was brought into play.

"Four, four, four years more!" was the chant taken up whenever the general cheering slackened.

The Mayor said in part:

"There is only one pledge, only one promise which as an honest man I can give, and that pledge and that promisc I propose to keep, and it is if I return to office I shall strive during those four years with the same single eye to duty with which I have tried to serve during the last two. [Applause.]

"The issues of the campaign have been discussed so fully that there is no need for me now, at this late hour, to go into them, but there is one question which I wish to say a word upon, and on that question I ask you to think conscientiously and honestly."

The Mayor spoke of the control of public franchises. He said that the practical confiscation which was promised by soms of his opponsnts was at present a financial impossibility.

"In the Staten Island ferry, three days ago," said he, "we opened the most complete and perfect ferry service in the world. Nsxt Monday at 4:30 I shall turn the switch of the first municipal electric lighting plant in the Eastern States.

"This campaign is one of the most vital in our city's history; the issue that has come rises above mere questions of partisanship. It is a year when men who love New York should forget party distinction, and so I call upon all good citizens who love their city to rise above partisanship, to ignore whether they be Democrats or whether they be Republicans, and to fight and vote for the fair name and honor of the city we all love." [Applause and cheers.]

Ex-Judge D Cady Herrick said in part:

"A few weeks ago we seemed to be passing through an era of political good feeling in this country. Bryan and Roosevelt had joined hands. Tammany had indorsed and approved the action of the President. Encouraged by this approval and fresh from his triumphs in bringing about peace in the Far East, the President turned his efforts toward bringing about peace upon the football gridiron, and even took into serious consideration the request of the Women's Club of Philadelphia to bring about ths adoption of a curfew law for husbands.

"Peace reigned all around; the football players ceased to bite and gouge and slug each other; the campaign bid fair to be a dull, uneventful, harmonious affair, when suddenly this era of good feeling was rudely disturbed, and now we have in the great City of New York a contest that has degenerated into a sort of Doneybrook Fair."

Mr. Herrick then took up ths constitutional amendments which are to be voted on.

"I will only call your attention to two," said he. "The first is one which provides for increasing the number of Supreme Court Justices in the State. I undertaks to say now that the number of Supreme Court Judges in the State—if their work is properly apportioned to them—is amply sufficient to dispose of all the judicial business in the State.

Merely to Provide Jobs.

"Of course the purpose of this is perfectly apparent; it is not to increase the efficiency of the judiciary, but to provide 'jobs,' to elect more Judges in the interior of the State where they do not need them, where they pay a salary of $7,200 a year, and then transfer them to the First and Second Districts, where the salaries are $17,500 a year. Taking into consideration the manner in which it has been handled, it is a matter of surprise that our Supreme Court is as good as it is.

"Some Justices have been punished, some rewarded, positions of honor which should be awarded to round out an honorable judicial career, to those of long service and tried experience, have been awaded to the new-comers who have not by long service lost their influence with those who make and break Judges. This is an amendment that every one having respect for the courts should join in to bury out of sight."

The $50,000,000 Highways Plan.

The speaker took up the amendment providing for the expenditure of $50,000,000 for the improvements of the highways of the State.

"After our experienced with the $10,000,000 appropriated for the improvement of the canals," said he, "I submit to you whether you think it wise or prudent to intrust those now in control of the affairs of this great State with the expenditure of $50,000,000 to improve its highways.

"You remember the scandal, the corruption, the stealing which accompanied the expenditure of that money. The adoption of this amendment would bring joy to every dishonest contractor, every corrupt Highway Commissioner, and rotten town politician in the interior of the State."

"This year a census of the State is being taken—nay, it has already been taken, and is being taken over again—it keeps the boys employed and affords an excuse for paying them—and it prevents the electors of the State from being fully informed until after election. Now, the Legislature will reapportion the Assembly districts of the State. It may increase your number, it may diminish them; it depends upon them whether you get the increase to which you are entitled or whether you will be deprived of your just rights.

"There is another reason why you should look closely to your representatives in the Legislature. It is becoming evident that the insurance interests of the State are not going to rest content with what the investigating commitee may do. I see by a paragraph in the morning paper, dated from Albany, that the 'House of Mirth' is being refitted and resupplied with those things calculated of good-fellowship; and, by the way, why this universal condemnation of the proprietor?

Produced a Governor and Senator.

"He is but pursuing a calling and career that in the past has been crowned in at least one instance by making a man Governor and in another a Senator of the United States. Other signs indicats that preparations are being made for a vigorous campaign before the Legislature.

"It is stated that in the past no legislation which these great interests opposed has ever been passed, and nons which they favored has ever been defeated. See to it that you send legislators who will break that record. Send legislators who will control the insurance companies, and not be controlled by them.

"When the Democratic candidate charged last year that corporate interests were contributing large sums of money to purchase the Presidency he was denounced as a liar and a slanderer. You now know the truth."

Mr. Herrick said he was against Federal control of insurance.

"I am opposed to it," he said, "because of the danger that instead of the Federal Government controlling the corporations the corporations may control the Federal Government.

"Now in conclusion a few words about a local matter. The administration of the affairs of a city is a business or profession in itself, and in a great city like this, composed, in fact, of many cities, with varied interests and necessities, calls for administrative and executive ability of a very high order. Trained men are best in every calling.

Not Like a Sunday School.

"A great city like this cannot be governed like a Sunday school. Crime cannot be entirely eradicated; the most vigilant supervision will neither make nor keep all minor officials efficient and honest, but although there undoubtedly have been shortcomings in Mayor McClellan's administration, yet I see that some of the best men in your city, men who have heretofore been political adversaries of your nominee, unite in saying that he has given the best administration of New York City affairs that it has had in twenty-five years.

"To defeat him would be a calamity to the city, would be an object lesson that honest, conscientious, intelligent public service counts for nothing in this community."

Before Judge Herrick concluded, Controller Grout came on the platform and was enthusiastically received. As soon as Judge Herrick concluded, Chairman Harrison read a telegram of regrets from John G. Carlisle.

"Sorry I cannot be present," he wired, "to unite with my fellow-Democrats in their efforts to secure the conservative and sensible administration of municipal affairs during the next four years."

Patrick McGowan, nominated for President of the Board of Aldermen, was introduced, but he made only a two-minute address, and then gave way to Controller Grout. Mr. Grout said in part:

"This is a battle for the salvation or destruction of this, our great city; and the candidates of the Democratic Party are those who stand for the integrity of New York and the integrity of the administration, and against those who attack it. You have a campaign of commerce offered to you by those who are candidates for Mayor against George B. McClellan. Two very promising men, one young and one old—one old enough to know better, and the other one we think does not wish to know better. Two promising Williams." [Laughter.]

A voice: "Two counterfeit bills."

The Controller said Mayor McClellan's administration had done much for a new water supply and for more schools. He said a period of unrest and discontent seemed to prevail, and had been heightened by the insurance disclosures.

"And building upon this feeling of unrest," he continued, "created in the minds of all the people because of the customs of these companies, come forward the apostle of municipal ownership and the uneasy, irregular guerrillas of warfare who first formed behind him and who are inducing so many good-meaning citizens to flock to his support. What do they mean to do for us? How many of them understand their problem?"

Mr. Grout took up the municipal ownership question in detail, saying that he was the original but sane advocate of city ownership of its utilities.

"Soon," he said, "you will find somebody to come up and outdo Hearst, if that is possible, and he will propose a municipal ice cream plant on every block. [Laughter.] I believe his emissaries are now on the east side promising free telephones to everybody who votes for him.

Mr. Grout closed by saying that the Mayoralty and not the District Attorneyship was the chief issue, and that those who vote for Jerome as well as those who vote for Osborne should vote for McClellan.

JUDGE PUT BROTHER IN JAIL.

Also Fined Him $50 for Contempt of Court.

Special to The New York Times.

OWINGSVILLE, Ky., Oct. 28.—In Rowan Circuit Court, at Morehead, yesterday, Circuit Judge Allie W. Young, formerly noted all over the country as the Chairman of the State Central Democratic Committee during the Goebel campaign and developments, fined his brother, William A. Young, Democratic nominee for Representative from this district, $50 and sentenced him to jail for twenty-four hours for contempt of court. The jail sentence was remitted after William Young had served part of it. The entire fine was paid.

William Young was counsel for the defense in the case of Henry and Alonzo Fraley, charged with the murder of Sehron Profitt over feudal troubles, and during the selection of a jury, when his brother made some ruling he did not like, uttered a discourtcous remark to the court. Judge Young said:

"Fine Mr. Young $5, Mr. Clerk."

William Young made another remark, followed by others, each time the fine being raised by his brother, the Judge. At last the Judge became tired and ordered his brother to jail for two hours.

William Young said: "Make that twelve hours."

His brother answered: "I will do better than that. Take Mr. Young to jail for twenty-four hours, Mr. Sheriff."

William's brother attorneys asked that the jail sentence be remitted, which was done after Young had served several hours. Judge Young said that while William Young was his brother, when he appeared before his court hs was on the same footing as any other attorney.

Ths incident created a sensation, as the Youngs have always been bosom companions, and William Young is making his present race for Representative in order to further his brother's chances for appointment to the Appellate Court Judgeship of Kentucky if Judge Paynter is elected to the United States Senate.

FIGHT STARTED ALREADY OVER MRS. TODD'S MONEY

Detectives Guard Apartment of the Old Woman Who Was Killed.

TWO MEN AT FISTICUFFS

Her Former Lawyer and a Friend Come to Blows—Dispute Over the Body, Too.

The relatives of Mrs. Margaret Todd, the wealthy old lady who was killed on the Reading Railroad, near Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, have already begun a fight over the estate.

Ingersoll Lockwood, a lawyer of 114 Fifth Avenue, went to the apartment house, 29 West Twenty-sixth Street, yesterday morning and told Mr. Amory, the Superintendent, that he was the attorney of the late Mrs. Todd and the trustee of her last will, made three years ago. He had come to take charge.

The lawyer asked if W. S. Heal had entered Mrs. Todd's apartments, and threatened to have Amory arrested if he allowed Heal to gain access to Mrs. Todd's papers. When Lockwood arrived at the door of Mrs. Todd's apartments he found that her stepdaughter, Mrs. Howse, was already in possession, and he could not get in.

Mrs. Howse said that she was acting in the interest of her step-sister, Mrs. Frank Tousey, the only daughter of Mrs. Todd, who is now in Vienna. She refused to give up any papers to the lawyer.

While the general opinion is that Mrs. Todd's death was purely accidental, the relatives are puzzled to account for her being found lying on the track outside Philadelphia at 10 o'clock at night. Supt. Amory said yesterday afternoon that Mrs. Todd had been very nervous during the last few weeks.

On Friday she was going out to see some friends in West Tenth Street and also expressed a desire to go to East Orange to visit some persons she had not seen for some time. He was to accompany her. Just as the carriage drove up to the door a Miss Knight came up and entered into conversation with Mrs. Todd. A few minutes later Mrs. Todd said: "Amory, you stay at home. Miss Knight will come with me."

She told the coachman to drive to Christopher Street. That was the last Amory saw of her.

Yesterday morning Miss Knight called at the apartment house and told Amory that Mrs. Todd had ordered the coachman to drive to the West Twenty-third Street ferry. On arrival at Jersey City she had bought a ticket for Philadelphia for Mrs. Todd and put her on the 3 o'clock train. Mrs. Todd said to her: "Amory knows where I am going." Miss Knight did not explain why Mrs. Todd had so suddenly decided to go to Philadelphia.

Reading railway detective say that Mrs. Todd arrived at the station in Philadelphia from New York at 6 P. M. She presumably rode in a trolley car to the Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Street station, where she boarded a Royal Blue train for New York. A check for $5 and $105 in money were found on the body, in addition to seven diamond rings, a diamond brooch, and diamond earrings. The railway officials believe that the woman mistook the rear door of the Pullman car for a compartment, and was hurled off the platform as the train swung around a curve.

To protect herself from any attempts to force an entry into Mrs. Todd's apartments Mrs. Howse hired two private detectives who went on duty at 1:30 yesterday afternoon. One man remained in the rooms and the other stood at the foot of the stairs to prevent visitors going up. All day there was a stream of women friends who had known and taken an interest in "dear old Mrs. Todd," but none of them was allowed to go up to the apartment, as Mrs. Howse refused to see any one.

Mr. Lockwood, a gray-haired man over six feet tall, sat on a chair in the hall of 29 West Twenty-sixth Street. The lawyer said he had been considerably pained by the number of "grafters" and schemers who had been constantly cruising around after Mrs. Todd's money. His endre time had been devoted to fending them off, he said, and he had succeeded in doing so, but it had been very difficult.

"The most active admirer," said Lockwood, "was a young man named Heal, who wanted to marry my client. She had lots of admirers, but Heal was the busiest. He used to take her to dinners and theatres. I managed to keep him off, but I had to be very firm.

"If any man had married Mrs. Todd," said Lockwood, "he would have been fooled, because by a deed of trust executed by the old lady in 1903, I have full control of the estate during the lifetime of Mrs. Frank Tousey, who was the only beneficiary of the will. I have taken charge of this house and shall stay here until Mrs. Frank Tousey arrives from Europe. Mrs. Howse and St. Clair Tousey, the brother-in-law of Mrs. Frank Tousey, have no right in the apartments at all."

When W. S. Heal, who is a short slightly built man about 50 years of age, returned to the apartment house at 6:30 last night and saw the lawyer seated in the chair he got very angry.

"What do you mean by circulating reports that I was scheming to marry Mrs. Todd," yelled Heal.

"I have not said anything about you, Sir," said the big man, meekly.

"Get out of my way or I'll thrash you," said the fiery little man, as he rushed at his big foe.

They clinched, and for a few seconds there was a representation of a David and Goliath combat in the hall. Then Amory parted them. But this didn't satisfy Heal. He shook his fist in Lockwood's face and told him he would thrash him if he ever crossed his path again.

In his apartment upstairs Mr. Heal, who is a manufacturer of notions at 34 Cooper Square, said: "Lockwood has no right here at all. Mrs. Todd had him thrown out of the house last June. This was his room that I now occupy.

"On Thursday night Mrs. Todd sent for another lawyer, George Gordon Hastings of 170 Broadway, to make a new will for her. She gave her instructions to him and a draft of the will was to have been submitted to her on Monday night. I have known Mrs. Todd for over twenty years, and never had the slightest intention of marrying her. We were always the best of friends. She was very eccentric and very wealthy."

Mr. Hastings, who was seen last night, said: "I made a new will for Mrs. Frank Tousey last May before she went to Europe, and through that Mrs. Howse sent for me to see Mrs. Todd. I understand that Mr. Lockwood is a beneficiary to a small amount in the will."

Two undertakers claimed the body from the Coroner at Philadelphia yesterday morning. The Stephen Merritt Burial Company had sent over a special man, acting under instructions of St. Clair Tousey, and a local undertaker had been sent by J. A. Waas of Hamilton, N. J., a nephew of Mrs. Todd. The Coroner decided in favor of Mr. Tousey, and delivered the body to the representative of the Merritt Company, but refused to give up the jewels, which were valued at $20,000.

Mrs. Todd was the widow of Louis L. Todd, proprietor of the Hotels Vendome and Marlborough. Mrs. Todd had been a very beautiful woman and accustomed to a great deal of attention. She never missed the Old Guards' ball, and had already had the costume made for the coming one. At one time Mrs. Todd had ruddy auburn hair and she generally wore a wig of the same hue. Her estate is roughly estimated at $400,000.

Her daughter, Mrs. Frank Tousey, has been cabled to and will sail from Bremen for New York on Tuesday.

Mr. Lockwood called at Merritt's undertaking establishment last night and said that he wanted Mrs. Todd's body cremated. At the same time St. Clair Tousey entered and said: "You have no right to interfere. Her daughter wishes the body buried at Woodlawn, and that is what is going to happen."

DALY'S NEW SHAW PLAY BARRED IN NEW HAVEN

morning that the play is unfit, detrimental to public morals, I will not give another performance. If, however, they say it is fit, that it is what I think it is, then I will go on with it and run the risk of being arrested.

"I know of no better way than this to get a fair judgment of the play. The press is, as I have always understood, the exponent of public opinion. I shall leave the matter to the judgment and the honor of these men. I can do no more.

"I have never maintained, mind you, that 'Mrs. Warren's Profession,' is a play for children. It is a play for intelligent grown-ups. How such can find anything to cavil at is, as I have said, beyond me.

"Another thing, I will find it difficult to believe, impossible, in fact, that the New York public thinks the play immoral until the truth is forced upon me. This because of the class of persons who have bought tickets in advance. Many of these men and women are not only eminently respectable, but intelligent as well. Some of them, I feel convinced, have read Shaw, have even read 'Mrs. Warren's Profession.' I will not believe until I must that these persons would attend a performance they thought questionable.

"The only intimation that I have received in this city that the play was not acceptable is from this fellow Comstock and from a few anonymous writers. No, none of these letters were from persons of any consequence.

"We selected New Haven on purpose for the opening performance. It was my opinion that New Haven, with its Yale students, as well as the influence which the college has upon the minds of the citizens in it, would be a good town in which to try the play out. I thought that the students would in the first place be profound enough to grasp the lesson which the play teaches, and flippant enough to guy anything in it which they thought salacious.

"Nothing in the slightest degree, and, mind you, we were not watching for the manifestations, occurred to indicate that the audience was displeased. I notice that a morning paper states that some persons jeered. This is absolutely false. The audience comprised the best citizens of New Haven, and there was absolutely no sign of disapproval on the part of any one.

"On the contrary, at the end of the third act a professor at Yale—I think his name was Mendel—came behind the scenes to compliment me on the play, to assure me that there was absolutely nothing to cavil at in it. Some others told me this, I think among them another member of the Faculty of Yale, but I do not remember his name.

"I went to see Mayor Studley after he had closed us up. I asked him if he had seen 'Mrs. Warren's Profession' or read the play. He replied that he had not. I then asked him on what ground he had stopped our further rendering of it. He replied that several citizens had complained to him.

"I then made him this offer: I requested him to rescind his order—to withdraw it publicly. He might then select any twelve persons he chose, and I would give a private performance for his and their benefit. He was to have the book of the play himself, so that he could follow it and see that we did not cull, or what faultfinders might say, expurgate it. If after he saw it, saw and heard for himself, he and his colleagues still thought the play detrimental to public morals, I would abide by the decision without demurring. He would not grant me this concession.

"I pleaded with him that my standing as an actor was more or less affected by his action of stopping the play, and that he ought to concede me this test, which I regarded as nothing more than common justice, but he declined. He explained that he was nothing more than the servant of the public; that sufficient persons had complained, had gone about it in the legal way, and that it had been imperative for him to act.

"In a sort of an aside he explained to me that I had selected a poor town in which to open the play—that the citizens of it were rather hide-bound.

"I did not tell him, as I have told you, that that was the very reason why I had selected it.

"He did say commiseratingly that he was sorry that he could not pay our fare back to New York again.

"It's a singular thing that the morning papers of New Haven—the morning after the performance—all praised the play. As soon as Mayor Studley had closed us up, however, that afternoon, all the afternoon papers denounced us vigorously."

SHAW PLAY FOR MISS REHAN.

Her Health Delays Presentation of "Capt. Brassbound's Conversion."

Miss Ada Rehan, who is to appear in George Bernard Shaw's play, "Captain Brassbound's Conversion," arrived on the American liner New York yesterday afternoon. Miss Rehan had been in England and Scotland since last May. While away Miss Rehan underwent an operation for appendicitis, and the date of her appearance on the stage will rest with her physician. The Shuberts will be her managers. Her leading man will be Charles Richman.

Fifty-five men and one woman who were detained on Ellis Island because they had been associated with the Greek woman who was discovered to have smallpox at the Immigration Station last Friday were sent to Hoffman Island yesterday for observation.

The quarters they had overnight were thoroughly fumigated. Commissioner of Immigration Watchorn said, and he did not think there was any danger of any one on the island taking the disease. Dr. Doty, the Port Health Officer, was of the same opinion.

Boy Fatally Shoots Another.

SARATOGA, Oct. 28.—Harold Groat, aged 16; Willie Eldredge, 15, and Ernest Whealey, 12, were hunting squirrels near the Saratoga Golf Club grounds in Greenfield this afternoon, when Whealey was fatally shot in the head by Groat, who carried a rifle. The boy was found unconscious in the highway by a farmer, his companions having fled from the scene. Groat was subsequently arrested.

FOOD.

THE SECRET OF YOUTH.

De Soto looked for the secret of youth in a spring of gushing, life-giving waters, which he was sure he would find in the New World. Alchemists and sages (thousands of them) have spent their lives in quest for it, but it is only found by those happy people who can digest and assimilate the right food which keeps the physical body perfect that peace and comfort are the sure results.

A remarkable man of 94 says: "For many long years I suffered more or less with chronic costiveness and painful indigestion. This condition made life a great burden to me, as you may well imagine.

"Two years ago I began to use Grape-Nuts as food, and am thankful that I did. It has been a blessing to me in every way. I first noticed that it had restored my digestion. This was a great gain, but was nothing to compare in importance with the fact that in a short time my bowels were restored to free and normal action.

"The cure seemed to be complete; for two years I have had none of the old trouble. I use the Grape-Nuts food every morning for breakfast, and frequently eat nothing else. The use has made me comfortable and happy, and, although I will be 94 years old next Fall, I have become strong and supple again, erect in figure, and can walk with anybody and enjoy it." M'CLELLAN GAVE "IT" TO MURPHY, SAYS HEARST

Answering Jerome, He Calls the Mayor Worse Than Boss.

CANDIDATE'S TIMED OVATION

Riding Academy Packed for Appeal to Labor—Says He'd Send the Man from Good Ground to Jail.

What was planned to be the climax of the Municipal Ownership campaign was reached last night with the big labor demonstration at the Durland Riding Academy, in Sixty-sixth Street, near Central Park West. Mr. Hearst at this meeting addressed the greatest audience that has come to hear him so far. He was received with partly whooped-up applause and cheers that lasted twelve minutes by the clock.

The Riding Academy was crowded when Mr. Hearst arrived at 10:39 o'clock. The place can seat at a conservative estimate 5,000 persons. Every inch of standing room except in the centre aisles was crowded.

According to the police, fully as many had been turned away as got in. These remained about the entrance listening to Hearst spellbinders who addressed overflow meetings in the open air and gave the chief candidate on the Municipal Ownership ticket a rousing ovation as he arrived in his carriage.

At the moment Mr. Hearst made his appearance in the hall, the entire audience rose to its feet and started off the racket which has become familiar to those who have followed the Hearst meetings during the campaign. There was waving of flags and handkerchiefs, whistling, cheering, howling, and a rapid fire manipulation of rattles, with which every second person in the audience was armed.

Mr. Hearst stood bowing and smiling in response to this reception. It was a little bit too palpable that the applause was "led," and that it would have worn itself out in half the time had not certain ones on the platform and in the main hall spurred the audience on to new efforts.

When quiet had been restored Mr. Hearst began his speech, emphasizing at the outset that his fight was not directed against any party in particular, but against the bosses of both parties. Mr. Hearst said, in part:

"If you vote to retain your properties you can always change your mind and give them away later if you so desire. But if you vote now to give away your gas franchises and Subway franchises and other properties you can't change your mind and get them back.

and McClellan for four years you surrender unconditionally to as brutal a lot of private speculators and public plunderers as ever banded together to rob and outrage the helpless people.

"The selfish speculators, the corrupt bosses, the impudent puppets, care nothing for popular indignation. McClellan if you elect Murphy and McCarren said in his speech of acceptance:

"'No amount of clamor, either from without or within the party, will make me follow a different course.' What is this clamor but the voices of the people raised in protest?

"McClellan signs the Remsen gas steal. You raise your voices in protest against such betrayal of the people's trust. But no amount of clamor either from without or within the party will make him follow a different course.

"There are some simple-minded folk that think that McClellan is less culpable than Murphy. Murphy is as evil a specimen of a criminal boss as we have had since the days of Tweed, but is he any worse than McClellan? Murphy did not receive the confidence of a trusting people. Murphy was not elected to represent them. Murphy did not stand with his hand on the sacred book and swear to protect the people, and then sell them out.

"Murphy is as bold a buccaneer as ever sailed the political seas, but the man at the wheel is McClellan, and not one act of political piracy could Murphy have committed if the little Mayor had not consented.

"Why, Mr. Shearn and I would rather put the boss of Tammany Hall in jail than any other of the corrupt crew of public plunderers.

"Mr. Jerome has asked how Murphy got it, and I am going to tell you how Murphy got it. He got it through the active assistance of his little Mayor, who sold out the people of New York in order that Murphy could buy Good Ground.

"I believe that good wages for good work is the cornerstone of American prosperity. I believe that the distribution of wealth is just as important as the creation of wealth. The purchasing power of the individual citizen is the measure of the prosperity of the country, and whatever adds to the prosperity of the individual citizen adds to the prosperity of the business community.

"We want full and free opportunity for all our citizens, and we want the end of a system where business men are blackmailed and workingmen sweated to make grafters rich."

Mr. Hearst was applauded for a full minute when he had concluded. There were cries of "You're the boy!" "That's the stuff!" "Go at 'em!" and "Shake 'em up!" Mr. Hearst then introduced Mr. Shearn, who said in part:

"Everybody in this town is talking about the great Hearst landslide. Coming down in the car to-night I heard one man ask another: 'I wonder what Charley Murphy will say after he gets his breath on the night of Nov. 7?' A negro down South, after he had witnessed a lynching, was warned to keep quiet and said: "'Deed, boss, I ain't goin' to say nothin'. I thinks 'Rastus got off pretty easy, considerin' de offense.' That's what Murphy will say on the morning after election. When this lynching party is over on Nov. 7, McClellan will be found strung on high by the rope of the Remsen Gas bill.

"When I am District Attorney I purpose to treat all criminals, little and big, alike. I will go after the man 'higher up' as well as the common thief. I won't fish after minnows with bent pins; I'll go after the strongest of the fish. And I'll get these sharks of finance and give them what they deserve.

"I say that men like John A. McCall, Richard McCurdy, and the rest of them make the bunko game of policy playing look small. My first business as a District Attorney will be to work to secure indictments for those who have been responsible for the insurance irregularities."

Judge Seabury in his speech reaffirmed that the Municipal Ownership League had no programme of confiscation in its platform.

"We will usher in municipal ownership in a legal, regular, and orderly way," he declared.

Ex-Senator John Ford, who is running for Controller, said in part:

"This is a political revolution. After this election there will be no more political bosses in New York City. We are not only going to oust the bosses, but we are going to keep them out. We have in our platform a plank calling for an amendment to the Constitution providing for direct nominations.

Michael Brayer, a labor leader and candidate for Register on the Hearst ticket, presided. The first mention of Hearst's name led to a demonstration which lasted for two minutes and was followed by cries of "Put out the Gas man" and "Three cheers for our next Mayor!" Murphy's name brought hisses and groans.

SUESINE SILK Wears Better Than Silk.

THE E'S nothing so well worth owning for both service and beauty as a dress or waist of Suesine Silk—there is nothing more effective.

At a large reception recently held in this city, the two handsomest gowns in the room were made of Suesine Silk.

Compares with China silk in finish and texture, but wears better because of the touch of cotton in it; and costs half the price.

RESTAURANT CROWD WILD OVER JEROME

A Little Hungary Greeting Makes His Eyes Grow Dim.

FOUR SPEECHES LAST NIGHT

New Gibe for J. Sergeant Cram and Praise for the Foreign-Born, His East Side Neighbors.

District Attorney Jerome started in early last night and kept on till late. By traveling from place to place benind a pair of swift horses, Mr. Jerome managed to address four different meetings south of Fourteenth Street. At each meeting he went into the issues of the fight as seriously and with as much detail as if he had been speaking at a Carnegie Hall mass meeting.

In all he managed to make his voice heard by more than 5,000 people. Four-fifths of these were Jews, while the other thousand were mostly Italians, with a sprinkling of German and Irish. The American-born and descended voter was not in it last night, but Justice herself would have to lend her scales for the weighing of the enthusiasm pervading all the gatherings and for deciding whether those who cheered longest and loudest were the Italians that crowded the Church of the Land and Sea, at Henry and Market Street, or the Hungarian Jews that packed Lafayette Hall, in Avenue D, where he finished up at 10:30 o'clock.

All the other enthusiasts, however, were outdone by the crowd of merrymakers that filled Little Hungary, in East Houston Street, when Mr. and Mrs. Jerome reached that place after the completion of the day's programme. The demonstration there when Mr. Jerome appeared in the door of the restaurant was about as remarkable as anything of the kind that has happened in the campaign. Nobody knew he was coming. He did not take a private room, but went into the main restaurant with his wife and the little party of assistants and friends who accompanied him.

The single word "Jerome" called out by some diner who happened to be looking toward the door flew through the place like an electric spark, sending men and women to their feet, and for more than five minutes afterward the Hungarian band's music was completely drowned by the shouting and the hand-clapping. Men and women got up on their chairs to see better. Many waved their handkerchiefs, while others raised their filled glasses and drank to the success of the man on whom all eyes were centred.

For a moment Mr. Jerome seemed totally overcome, and did not move. Finally he made his way, smiling his broadest, to a table and prepared to sit down. Those about him willed otherwise, however. Cries for "Speech!" were heard, and grew in intensity till the whole gathering was repeating that one word in rhythmic unison. At last Mr. Jerome yielded and rose. That was not enough. Up on a table he had to go. And by that time most of those in the restaurant were standing on tables and on chairs.

Reminding his hearers that he had already addressed four audiences, Mr. Jerome asked to be excused from making a fifth long speech.

"This is neither the time nor the place for political speechmaking," he said. "All I can do and will do is to thank you with all my heart for your kindness—a kindness that, in one form or another, has met me everywhere during this fight, until the fighting has grown hard. You know, a man can't strike his best blows when there is a lump in his throat and his eyes are dim. And the spirit that has met me, that has come to me in the people wherever I have been going these last weeks, has been such that a man stronger than I claim to be could not remain unmoved in the face of it.

"But if now I am to say anything at all about what is stirring in the city, let me just remind you that this is not a personal fight or a personal matter—it is a fight of the people against the bosses, and I am only the humble standard-bearer of the people. I thank you all—friends and neighbors."

Not even then did he escape. The next thing the guests of Little Hungary did was to march up in long file to the table to shake hands with Mr. Jerome and beg buttons from the members of the party. Most pockets were well loaded for emergencies, so that by the time when finally Mr. and Mrs. Jerome were able to get a bite to eat, almost everybody in the place, women as well as men, were wearing the well-known Jerome campaign button, with his name in white across the black square. And then women would come up to touch the rim of their glass to that of Mr. Jerome in Continental European fashion. One of them said:

"You've won one vote to-night at least—my husband's. He was not going to vote for you before. Now he has changed his mind."

The speeches made by Mr. Jerome at the four meetings of the evening were largely repetitions of what he has said before. The three distinctly Jewish audiences were told about his action in regard to the prosecution of those supposed to be responsible for the outrage at the funeral of Chief Rabbi Joseph. To the Italians in the Church of the Land and Sea he spoke more of the general issues of the campaign. J. Sergeant Cram came in for a new kind of fillip.

"In the old days he used to be John Sergeant Cram," said Mr. Jerome, "or John S. Cram, or even Jack Cram. Then his name was not yet parted in the middle. He may have been mere Jim even, for all I know, but not 'Poor Jim,' for was he not a member of the Dock Commission.

"In the same way we may, after a while, hear no more of Charley Murphy. What will it be? C. Francis Murphy or Sir Charles of Good Ground. Well, whether it be this or that, one thing is sure—we'll have to change the words of the old, old song that used to be popular once. It will have to run this way: 'Comrades, comrades, ever since we were in the Dock Department together.'"

Referring to his residence on the east side, and within a few hundred feet of the place where he was speaking, Mr. Jerome said he had never had four happier years than the last, and that he had never learned or loved more than since he made his home in Rutgers Street. And he added that whether elected or no, he would continue to live in the same place as long as he had money with which to pay the rent. Of the action of the Republican Convention he said that it had not made a Republican of him or changed him in any way.

JEROME IN THE PULPIT.

Speaks at the Church of the Epiphany To-day—Wednesday's Meeting.

The meeting at Carnegie Hall next Wednesday night, which has been arranged by the leaders of the New York bar, and at which Joseph H. Choate and District Attorney Jerome are to be the principal speakers, will be one of the big events of this campaign. One thing is certain, that in many years no public gathering has been held in this city which might be regarded as equally representative of the legal profession. Not only has all the work of arrangement been done by the Committee of Eighteen, with four ex-Presidents of the Bar Association at its head, but all the expenses have come out of the pockets of those men.

As a tribute to a fellow-member of the profession this meeting will hold a position almost unique in the annals of that profession.

An anonymous contribution from a city employe reached Mr. Jerome in a round-about way yesterday. It was accompanied by this letter:

"For evident reasons I do not care to contribute directly to Jerome's fund, and hence send this to you, for I know you are near enough his friends to see that it reaches his treasury.

"I do not need to say that my vote and influence will be exerted in his behalf, and I long for the day when as an American citizen I can use openly all my efforts to aid in good government in every way.

"I cannot afford to be identified with any anti-Tammany movement. May I ask you to see that it helps a good cause?"

Chairman Augustus H. Stibbins of the Jerome Campaign Committee of the Third Assembly District is wondering if Tammany has anything to do with the troubles he has encountered since he opened headquarters at 453 Hudson Street. Meetings were held every evening until Friday night, when the building suddenly was declared unsafe by the Building Department. A Building Inspector accompanied by a uniformed policeman appeared just as the evening's meeting was about to start and remarked that the ceiling would have to be supported. The landlord got angry, which resulted in bringing the Chief Inspector around. He said that a girder would have to be put in, and that the building must be closed in the meantime. The building was closed.

Mr. Jerome will speak at 3 o'clock this afternoon at the Church of the Epiphany, Sixty-fourth Street and Madison Avenue, where a meeting has been arranged by the Rev. Dr. Madison C. Peters and the Rev. Dr. Robert S. MacArthur, both of whom will also make addresses.

Mr. Jerome has accepted the invitation of the Rev. Dr. Frederick Lynch to speak next Sunday from the pulpit of Pilgrim Congregational Church, Madison Avenue and 121st Street.

Gen. Frederick C. McLewee, former Adjutant General of this State, informed Mr. Jerome yesterday that at a meeting in the Seventh Regiment Armory last Tuesday night, which was attended by more than 100 ysterans, a straw vote was taken on the District Attorneyship, the result being a unanimous declaration in favor of the re-election of Mr. Jerome.

Republican Rally at Durland's.

The Republican County Committee is planning for a big meeting during the present week at Durland's Riding Academy. It is hoped to have Joseph H. Choate and Frank S. Black as the principal speakers.

Socialist Talk to Deaf-Mutes.

At the headquarters of the Socialist Party, 250 West 125th Street, Algernon Lee, the Socialist candidate for Mayor, made a political address last night to seventy-five deaf-mutes from the Deaf and Dumb Institution at 162d Street and the Boulevard Lafayette. The speech was translated to the sign language by E. P. Clarke, instructor.

CART TAIL ORATORY ALL HOT FOR HEARST

Most Things, It Seems, Will be Free When He's Mayor.

CALL FOR POOR MEN'S GRAFT

Give Us a Chance to Get Our Mit on It, Says One Speaker—Force cast by Mr. Spitzker.

There was a lot of fun last night at the cart-tail meetings held about town to further the election of William Randolph Hearst. Over in Tenth Avenue, where six Hearst admirers, calling themselves the Rosignol Club, got up a meeting of their own. The Chairman, a fat little man, who talked in a squeaky voice, announced that any person in the crowd assembled might step up if he had a word to say in Hearst's favor.

The first man to accept the invitation announced that he was Jim Kenney.

"I'm a boilermaker be trade," he said, "and I works hard every day in the week for me three meals and a bed to sleep in, but me wife has to work as hard as I do taking in washin' because our rent is too high. Still I'm supposed to be her meal ticket. Now before her and me got spliced she had a better time than she had to-day, because she earned six a week in de jute mills in Greenpoint, and was able to take in a couple of rackets whenever she felt like it. But now she don't have time to do nawthin' but work.

"And why is it? Because all dem millionaires over on Fift' Aveny has collected all de coin in a heap and put it in camphor to draw interest. And dey live on de interest, and de interest comes out of de pocket of de workin' man. It's time we put a stop to dat graft. If dere's any graft layin' 'round give de poor workin' man a chance to git his mit on it jist as well as de politicianers.

"De people need de graft more'n de millionaires, and dat ain't a Jim Osborne joke, either. And if we elect de Hon. William Sanford Hearst you kin bet yer boots he'll send dat graft over our way, because he won't need it for hisself, since he's got ten gold mines out West. If we git him in de Mayor's chair, he'll make good. Good-night."

Over in Second Avenue, at another independent Hearst meeting presided over by Jacob Lichter, the principal speaker was Adolph Spitzker.

"I der first time talk to-night," explained Mr. Spitzker, "und dot's vhy I vas here to election Mr. Hearst's candidacy on der Mayor's office. Ve all der times listen to dem champagne meetings on Tammany's Hall before election und sheer midoudt knowing for vhy. Now comes der question. Der vest man vhat ve can vote for ain't come oudt yet, but ve got next to der best in Mr. Hearst. He believes Munificent Ownership yust like ve do. Vhen ve election him ve'll git der start on it, und nobody can fuse mit us like dey all vill vant to fuse, because ve vill be boss und not Tammany's Hall. Vhen ve get Munificent Ownership it vill beneficial der vorkingmen's vages. Vhen Wan Vyck was elected under Low ve violationed der building code mit contraction vork on der Soupvay, und after Low vas high in der Mayor's shair ve got yet it vorser in der neck because ve could not buy a glass of beer Sundays."

"Three cheers for Sunday!" shouted a voice in the crowd, and everybody cheered. That gave Mr. Spitzker another cue.

"Dot's vhat ve vant," said he. "Put Sunday out of der veek, give us twice so much vages as ve got, und don't charge poor men for taxes. Und on 'lection day if Mr. Hearst ain't der most surtonished man in New Jork mit der vote he gits I ain't any predictionator. Ve vant der frankises from der railroads, 3 cents carfare, und free Sunday."

"Tell us something about municipal ownership!" shouted a man on the sidewalk.

"Dot's der question," replied Mr. Spitzker—"magnificent ownership. Peoples vill own der railroads! Peoples vill own der trolley cars! Der Second Avenue line vill have to stop running 'less der Superintendent puts more cars on so ve vill have a car every minute, und der fare vill be only three cents. Der Republicans own der resurance companies und Tammany Halls owns der railroads. But vhen Mr. Hearst is election, der peoples vill own everyt'ing. Der funormental principles on vhich ve stand up is adherance to union labeiship because dem capitalist politicianer must be rejected for der violation of der expense vhich is shoved on der people to payment der bills mit der inviolorable opposition of der police force to close up Sunday.

"Vonce more. Ve have on New Jork 500,000 men who vould like der job of policemans. Mit Mr. Hearst on der Mayor's office he kin appointment a Police Commissioner vhat can power himself to dissharge every man on der force. Ve vill have twice so many Fire Departments, sixty thousand public schools if ve vant so much, und, vhen ve vish, a playground park on every block in der city. Now, in conclusionment, I vish to say dot don't forget to vote for Mr. Hearst, und you vill find oudt after you get him vhat you vill get."

There were four Hearst meetings on the upper west side of town, the speakers delivering their addresses from trucks. At the meeting held under the auspices of the Anderson Social Club in Fifty-third Street, Patrick Donohue, a truck driver, held 500 men and women for more than two hours. Donohue became a spellbinder a few days ago, and has been speaking for Hearst every night. Here are some of the things he said last night:

"Av anny of youse min intend ter stick ter Tammany Hall this election ye'll not do it if Bill Hearst runs across yer track. He'll convince yer in foive minutes that we've all been asses since we had a vote. Now, furst av all, ye must remimber that ye ar-re not Dimmycrats. Git that out of yer noddle. If that sticks there till election day, ye'll go inter the booth and vote for Mister McClellan. I niver knew a Dimmycrat in me loife as had insoides enough to switch to another ticket. So git Dimocracy out of yer noddles. After ye do that, ye become sane min, and ye are open ter rason. Then ye kin do your own thinkin' and not let the bosses do it fer yez. Let me tell yez how to vote, and Oi'll convince yez the bosses are throwin' th' bull inter yer."

"Stop for a minute!" shouted a man near the curb. "I want ter ax ye a question."

"And what is the question?" retorted Donohue.

"Are ye a Far Down?"

"Dade an' I'm not," replied Donohue; "I'm from Galway."

"Thin ye're not straight," replied the man near the curb. "A Donohue from Galway can't be right. You're a turncoat."

"I'm glad I'm not a McClellan man," shouted Donohue.

"I'm glad y're not, too," yelled the other fellow, and the crowd cheered.

After that Donohue was frequently interrupted, but he managed to shout loud enough for the crowd to hear:

"Vote for Hearst Election Day and ye'll all ride free on th' railroad cars."

Fifth Avenue Crowd Sees Fatal Fall.

Gustav Schmitt, living at 237 East Fifty-third Street, fell from the fifth floor of the Belgravia Apartment House, Fifth Avenue and Forty-ninth Street, yesterday, while cleaning a window. He was killed. There was the usual afternoon crowd in Fifth Avenue, and many persons saw Schmitt's fall.

BURN RED FIRE FOR HEARST.

Parade Not Up to Expectation in Numbers, but Was Enthusiastic.

The monster parade of six divisions in the interest of William R. Hearst promised for last night dwindled into two divisions when the start was made. The paraders, with three bands and plenty of red fire, marched past Mr. Hearst's headquarters in the Hoffman House before going to Durland's Riding Academy.

In the two divisions were 500 men and twice that many boys. It had been given out that Mr. Hearst would review them, but as the paraders passed the Hoffman House they could not make out whether or not the candidate was standing on the balcony. As the paraders marched by they sang:

Hoist, Hoist, he's not the woist,
William Randolph Hoist, Hoist, Hoist.
He's after the gas man last and foist.
William Randolph Hoist, Hoist, Hoist.

In the parade was a big man wearing a jumper, who carried a flag with the inscription:

"There is not a red flag in our parade and there were none last night on the east side. If there were, Tammany placed them there for the benefit of the sensational press."

When the paraders reached Durland's the place was packed, and they could not get in. Disappointed, but still willing to parade, they marched up and down Central Park West and through the side streets.

Another banner read: "No Money Can Buy Our Votes."

"What would you do for a drink?" yelled somebody from the sidewalk.

"Vote Against the Grafters," another banner read.

"Vote for Jerome," came back from the sidewalk. Some of the paraders answered:

"He's all right!"

Finally the paraders stopped to listen to the truck speakers. "Suspender Jack" McGee, a policeman in the days of William S. Devery, was one of these.

"The spirit of the boys of 1776 is among us," said he, "and the revolution in Russia may soon be amongst us, unless we vote straight for that grandest of modern men, Bill Hearst."

CRUISED ON MORGAN'S YACHT.

An Outing of Lesser Stars in Tammany Figures in the Campaign.

Nicholas R. O'Connor, chief Inspector of the Department of Public Works and a personal friend of J. Pierpont Morgan, took some of his Tammany friends out for a cruise on Mr. Morgan's yacht, the Corsair, on Wednesday last week. Republican and Hearst campaign managers declared yesterday that this showed a link between Tammany and the financier.

Mr. O'Connor explained that it was an annual custom for Mr. Morgan to turn the yacht over to him so that he could entertain friends on a cruise of a day and a night.

The Tammanyites were distinctly minor stars and not first luminaries. They included Bernard Downing, secretary to Borough President Ahearn; Secretary Willis Holly of the Park Board; Bernard Gorman, Deputy Superintendent of Buildings; ex-Sheriff Thomas J. Dunn, and William Dalton.

RINGS FURNISH NO CLUES.

Boston Police Again Baffled in Suit Case Murder Mystery.

BOSTON, Oct. 28.—Supt. Pierce and Chief Watts to-day made a tour of inspection of the waters in the vicinity of the spot where the second suit case in the harbor murder mystery was found yesterday. Chief Watts believes the head of the woman will be found near the place where this suit case was recovered.

Dr. Harris announced this afternoon that he found no marks on the legs and arms that could help in identifying the body.

The search for clues by means of the three rings found on one of the hands has been without result so far.

REPUBLICANS COMPLAINING.

Say Their Meetings Are Broken Up and Police Won't Interfere.

The Republican County Committee issued a statement yesterday complaining that some of its street meetings on Friday night were broken up by rowdies and that the police refused to interefere. The statement of the committee says:

"At Fifth Avenue and 134th Street speakers were stoned and so were the musicians. Appeals were made to the police, but they refused to interfere, and this encouraged the toughs.

"At last the firing of stones and missiles became so strong that the musicians and spellbinders had to flee for their lives. Several were struck in the face, and one man was knocked senseless by a brick which hit him in the forehead."

The officers of the County Committee appealed to Commissioner McAdoo yesterday to protect their meetings this week.

TAMMANY IS SURE M'CLELLAN WILL WIN

With Hearst Second, and Ivins a Poor Third.

DOUBLE CANVASS BEING MADE

It Gives Jerome an Even Chance—Mayor Drawing Some Republican Votes—Murphy Talks.

Beginning to-morrow night, upward of 200 Tammany district meetings will be held nightly throughout Manhattan and the Bronx, and approximately a like number will be held nightly in the other three boroughs. Meantime double canvasses are being made by the organization to get at the exact status of the vote, and several big mass meetings have been arranged. Literature is going out by the ton, and the billboards and dead walls are being literally plastered with posters and quotations.

Two distinct Tammany canvasses are under way, one to check the other. First and foremost is the canvass being made by the election district captains all over Manhattan and the Bronx. These figures are turned over to the Assembly district leaders, who, in turn, seek verification, and will hand them in at Tammany Hall the Saturday before election. The second canvass, which has been an institution at Tammany since Mr. Murphy became leader, is made by outside agencies, and is used as a check on the figures of the organization itself in the different districts.

From a reliable source it was learned last night that these figures, as already turned over to Mr. Murphy, indicate that McClellan is holding up to his strength of two years ago, and that Hearst is running ahead of Ivins in many of the districts. The canvass shows that McClellan is taking votes from Ivins to make up in part the Tammany votes going to Hearst, and that Hearst is drawing from Ivins as well as from disaffected Tammanyites and independents. From these figures the Tammany men are confident that McClellan will win by almost as large a plurality as two years ago, and that Ivins will be third in the race. The canvass also indicates that Jerome has something like an even chance of being re-elected.

This outside source, which has practically completed its preliminary canvass, starts its final canvass on Monday, and this will be complete by Saturday night.

All of the energies of the campaign managers are being directed at William R. Hearst. The Ivins campaign is being practically ignored. One of the Tammany leaders said last night: "Ivins is a dodo, and there's no use wasting time and ammunition on him." All of the Tammany speakers have been instructed to fire hot shot into the Hearst ranks to the end of the campaign. The Mayor himself, although refusing to mention Hearst by name, has talked during the last three days against the "rank hysteria" of the campaign.

Mr. McClellan has mapped out a strenuous week of campaigning. Already he has made thirty-one speeches. He has upward of thirty more scheduled for the remaining week of the campaign. His plans include a tour of Staten Island by automobile on Tuesday night and a tour of Brooklyn on Friday. The latter tour will take in seven or eight meetings. On the remaining nights he will go twice to the Bronx and once to Queens. The Mayor will close his campaign in Durland's Riding Academy on Saturday night, when his associates on the ticket and W. Bourke Cockran will speak.

Tammany's big demonstration of the week will be on Wednesday night, when all of the assembly districts below Twenty-third Street will unite in a torchlight parade and mass meeting at Tammany Hall. The Mayor will review the parade from the stand in front of Tammany Hall and will then address the audience in the hall. Overflow meetings will be held in the streets.

Arrangements have been made to use the New York Hippodrome for a monster mass meeting on the Sunday night before election. W. Bourke Cockran, Charles A. Towne, and Senator Thomas F. Grady will be the chief speakers.

At Tammany Hall yesterday Charles F. Murphy again expressed himself as confident of the election of the entire Democratic ticket, but said he was not prepared yet to give figures.

"Guess you will have no trouble in getting your figures next week," he said. "A canvass is being made, as usual, but the figures will not be handed in until the Executive Committee meets next Saturday afternoon."

Mr. Murphy was asked if Mayor McClellan's speech the night before at the Democratic Club, when the Mayor declared the election to be "no cinch," was to be taken as an indication that the organization was alarmed.

"Mayor McClellan made the same sort of statements when he was running for Congress in his old district," replied Mr. Murphy. "It gets people to work."

MUST VOTE FOR MORE WATER.

Unless Amendment Is Carried Nov. 7 Bonds Cannot Be Issued.

One of the constitutional amendments which will be voted on at the coming election applies especially to the City of New York. It is an amendment which would give to the city authority to issue bonds for a new water supply. The city is now prevented from doing that by reason of the debt limit. The proposed amendment provides that in the computation of New York's debt, in determining its borrowing capacity, all bonds issued after Jan. 1, 1904, for the purpose of providing a new water supply shall be omitted.

In expectation of the approval of the amendment by the people plans have already been prepared for the acquisition of a new water supply in the Catskills. These plans have been approved by the Board of Estimate. The whole cost of the project evolved by the Mayor's commission will be $161,000. The cost of the reservoir will be $112,000,000.

It is necessary in order to carry out the project that the people should approve at the coming election the amendment which will permit the city to issue water bonds to pay for the work.

HOW IVINS CAN WIN.

By Party Unity, Republican Club Says —Division Beat Roosevelt.

The Campaign Committee of the Republican Club issued an appeal yesterday to the Republicans of the city to stand by their colors. The appeal says:

"The Republicans could have won the city election in 1886 if they had not deserted their candidate, the intrepid Roosevelt. Do not repeat this blunder. Roosevelt could have been Mayor in 1886 if he had received the united vote of his party. The vote was as follows: Hewitt, 78,000; George, 68,000; Roosevelt, 60,000. Ivins will be elected if the Republicans stand by their colors.

"If the anti-Tammany vote had united instead of being divided between Low and Tracy, Van Wyck would have been defeated by 20,000 majority. It was only by the division of the anti-Tammany vote that Van Wyck was elected. This year it is the Tammany vote that is divided.

"It is not necessary to vote for Hearst to secure municipal ownership. Ivins is for municipal ownership. He is able and honest, and has great experience, and will make the best Mayor New York City ever had. Hearst is an unknown quantity, and McClellan has been found want-

For Jerome.

THE NEW YORK TIMES has received $25 from "M. L. J.," Highland Falls, for the Jerome campaign fund.

COURTS REVERSED OSBORNE.

How, Then, Did He Kill Deverylsm?—Also, Who Voted for Jerome?

"The last bit of foolishness from the lips of Osborne, according to the newspapers," said Mr. Jerome, "is that I voted at the primaries for the delegates to the convention that nominated him. I always enroll at the primaries, but I have voted only twice at them. This year I did not. If anybody appears to have voted in my name, Osborne had better ask his friend, the Borough President, how a floater could be permitted to vote in his district under the name of a man so well known down there as I am."

Then Mr. Jerome took up Mr. Osborne's assertion that he (Osborne) killed Deverylsm and made the policeman's job an honorable one.

"We should remember that Deverylsm in this town arose with Van Wyck," said Mr. Jerome. "Osborne is closely connected with Van Wyck through marriage. His political backing, as far as he has any, comes largely from the Van Wyck clique of statesmen. For three long years Osborne served under that great jurist, Asa Bird Gardiner, while Van Wyck was Mayor, and Deverylsm was rampant in this town. But neither Osborne nor his relative, the Mayor, did anything to suppress the 'organized police graft' of which he now speaks so loudly.

"It was in 1901, toward the close of the Van Wyck administration, that a Committee of Fifteen was formed to do those things which Asa Bird Gardiner and his assistant, Osborne, had not done. I worked in conjunction with that committee all through 1901. And it was only as a result of the labors of the committee which I thus assisted that Osborne was able to secure the convictions he has mentioned. Moreover, those convictions were secured after that distinguished jurist, Gardiner, had been removed from office and Mr. Philbin put in his place by Gov. Roosevelt. It is curious, too, that Osborne forgets that in the case of every policeman but one that he convicted of organized graft a reversal at the hands of the Appellate Division promptly followed. The one exception was the case against Capt. Diamond, on whom only a fine had been imposed."

Mr. Jerome took up the charge next that the number of secret and unpunished murders had increased in the city while he has been in office, and he pointed out the distinction between the work of the police in finding and arresting the culprits, and his own of prosecuting them.

"The District Attorney is not supposed to be a policeman," Mr. Jerome said, "and when Mr. Osborne makes the failure of the Detective Bureau to do its full duty an evidence of the inefficiency of the District Attorney's office, he either displays gross ignorance, or else willfully misrepresents for the sake of making a demagogic play.

"And he comments on my having called him 'Poor Jim.' I did so in sorrow, and not in sarcasm. When a strong mind can be brought into such vagaries and puerilities—to call them nothing worse—as Mr. Osborne has been indulging in, then it seems to me that 'Poor Jim' is the kindest thing that could be said of the man."

SOCIALISTS FIGHT HEARST.

Debs and Others Called Here to Aid in Repudiating Him.

The Socialist Party will make a strenuous effort this week to counteract the impression which the Hearst men have been seeking to create that all Socialists are for Hearst. About five hundred open air and hall meetings will be held between now and election day. Eugene V. Debs and other Socialist orators will come to assist. Mother Jones will stay and speak every night. A circular issued yesterday by the Campaign Committee said:

"All the party orators are instructed to show up the hollow and ridiculous position of Mr. Hearst, who tries to pose at the same time as the friend of the laboring class, the business men, and the rich taxpayers, while politically he has dickered in turn with Croker, Murphy, Odell, and R. Fulton Cutting, representatives of the capitalistic class.

"An increasing number of trades unions, not bogus but bona fide organizations of recognized standing, are openly declaring for the Socialist ticket as against the mongrel Hearst outfit. They prove their earnestness by voting money for the campaign of the Socialist Party.

"By the end of this week it will be demonstrated that Mr. Hearst, instead of being recognized as a leader and Messiah of the working class, is merely a politician trying to ride into power by the methods of a demagogue."

Legal Aid Society Still Needs $3,000.

The Directors of the Legal Aid Society say that since the announcement in the press that the society was in need of further support, many voluntary contributions have come in. The society is, however, still in need of $3,000 to enable it to continue its work to the end of the year. Checks should be sent to the Treasurer, Louis Windmuller, 20 Reade Street. The five offices of the society in September handled 1,696 cases.

Drowned with Hands in His Pockets.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, Oct. 28.—Hiram Mears, a well-to-do farmer and a veteran of the civil war, was found in Green Brook this morning by Franklin Dorthy, a twelve-year-old boy, who was paddling about near the shore. Mears, who was seventy years of age, disappeared on Wednesday night. When the body was found his hands were in his pockets.

THE SCHOOLS' GROWTH UNDER M'CLELLAN

Controller's Office Issues Figures Telling of Progress Made.

90,000 NEW SITTINGS READY

Before Jan. 1 a Large Part of 93,000 More Will Be Finished, It Is Thought.

Figures were issued from the Controller's office yesterday showing the new schools begun by the McClellan administration, the number of school buildings completed, and the amounts expended and made available with a view to putting every child of school age in full-time classes, according to the Mayor's pledge two years ago.

The figures show that of $58,906,463.40 of corporate stock authorized since consolidation to be issued for the purchase of school sites and the erection of school buildings more than 35 per cent., or $20,850,000, has been authorized in the one year and ten months of the McClellan administration.

Of the total amount authorized by the McClellan administration, $11,500,000 was sanctioned this year. This, together with the budget appropriation for this year of $21,997,017.77, makes the total provision for all school purposes in 1905 $33,497,017.77. The figures of the Finance Department show that in no other branch of the City Government has the same liberality been shown. The figures showing bonds authorized and disbursements and contracts entered into for sites and buildings since consolidation, omitting fractions of dollars, are as follows:

	Bonds authorized prior to Jan. 1, 1898, and reauthorized in	Net Disbursements for Sites and Buildings.	Building Contracts Registered During Yr.
1898	$2,301,586	.....	.....
1898	810,388	$3,410,919	$648,502
1899	8,474,597	3,844,617	3,985,305
1900	4,435,042	6,544,315	4,403,818
1901	4,169,383	4,575,092	3,395,902
1902	8,076,137	3,431,661	4,215,931
1903	9,788,430	6,675,437	5,431,279
1904	9,350,000	7,836,024	6,330,240
To Oct. 23, 1905	11,500,000	8,990,979	5,534,585
Total	$58,906,463	$45,309,948	$34,041,583

The actual disbursements on account of sites and construction from Jan. 1, 1902, are shown to have been:

YEAR 1902.

Borough.	Sites.	Construction, &c.	Total.
Man. and Bronx..	$609,279	$1,238,666	$1,847,946
Brooklyn	289,282	942,935	1,232,218
Queens	44,958	202,285	247,244
Richmond	66,194	36,128	102,322
Total	$1,009,714	$2,420,016	$3,429,731

YEAR 1903.

Man. and Bronx..	$1,316,206	$2,408,490	$3,924,697

Queens	5,095	335,053	400,148

	$1,792,273	$4,883,163	$6,675,437

YEAR 1904.

Man. and Bronx..	$966,020	$3,163,824	$4,129,845
Brooklyn	295,169	2,260,759	2,555,919
Queens	137,987	734,926	872,914
Richmond	31,231	246,113	277,345
	$1,430,400	$6,405,624	$7,836,024

YEAR 1905, (TO OCT. 20.)

Man. and Bronx..	$840,705	$4,133,618	$4,974,413
Brooklyn	620,107	2,261,480	2,881,587
Queens	26,863	790,650	817,322
Richmond	21,085	296,369	317,455
	$1,508,851	$7,482,127	$8,990,979

An analysis of the figures shows that not only in the amount of stock authorized, but also in the disbursements for sites and buildings and in contracts for new buildings registered, the twenty-two months of the present administration stand well ahead of any two of the preceding six years.

The new seatings completed and opened to use since Jan. 1, 1904, are approximately 90,000. In the same period contracts have been awarded for the construction of buildings which will provide over 93,000 sittings. Some 15,000 of the latter have already been completed and are included in the 90,000.

The remaining 75,000 previously contracted for and now completed, and the 93,000 contracted for and partly completed since January, 1904, make 168,000 sittings completed or provided for in this administration, a considerable part of which are to be completed by the first of next year.

A summary of the list of school buildings and additions completed and opened to use since Jan. 1, 1904, to date, together with the new sittings thus made available, gives a total of 73,418 sittings for Manhattan, 16,459 for the Bronx, 28,846 for Brooklyn, 6,868 for Queens, and 3,501 for Richmond, a total of 89,092 for all boroughs.

A summary of the list of contracts for the construction of new school buildings and additions for which bids already have been opened and contracts awarded since Jan. 1, 1904, to Oct. 23, 1905, shows:

Borough.	Total.	Number of Classrooms.	Number of Sittings.
Manhattan	$7,522,130	739	39,550
The Bronx	1,355,692	187	9,359
Brooklyn	4,755,946	477	20,450
Queens	1,263,414	184	9,200
Richmond	610,527	94	4,740
Total	$15,507,709	1,681	93,250

A large number of the new sittings included in the above table will be available before the close of this year.

C. A. EVERTZ FOR McCLELLAN.

Brooklyn Republican Speaks Out at Two Democratic Rallies.

At a Democratic mass meeting last night at Broadway and Kossuth Place, Brooklyn, R. S. Simons was speaking to 2,000 persons, when a stout man approached the truck and announced that he would like to say a few words. The crowd recognized him as Carl A. Evertz, one of the most prominent Republicans in Brooklyn. He shouted:

"I am a Republican, but I consider it a great privilege to be permitted to get up here to say a word in favor of the re-election of George B. McClellan. Some of you folks who think of throwing away your vote on Mr. Hearst ought to stop to consider the fact that if he happened to be elected he could not give you municipal ownership as he has promised.

"We don't want a hysterical government, and we're not foolish enough to turn down the best Mayor New York has had in many years."

Mr. Evertz, who is a manufacturer of pocket cases at 75 and 77 Spring Street, Manhattan, was invited to speak at another Democratic meeting and did so.

SHEPARD IGNORES RIDGWAY.

Praises Metz and McClellan and Speaks Kindly of Coler.

Edward M. Shepard, who ran for Mayor of New York on the Democratic ticket in 1901, made his first speech in the present campaign at the Kings County Democratic Club last night. Mr. Shepard's appearance on the platform was chiefly to help his friend, Herman A. Metz, the Democratic nominee for Controller and the President of the Club. He characterized Mr. Metz as a man who would be an "independent Controller."

Mr. Shepard also spoke in praise of George B. McClellan, but the McCarren men present, who had been expecting him to say a good word for the local ticket, were disappointed. Mr. Shepard made no reference to the Democratic borough candidates, but referred kindly to Bird S. Coler, the Municipal Ownership candidate for Borough President. He said:

"I have a great respect for the candidate who is running for Borough President on the Municipal Ownership ticket. Mr. Coler, when Controller, had opportunities to put into power these doctrines of municipal ownership, and the glory of Mayor McClellan's administration has been that what was begun years ago by Mr. Coler has been carried out under Mr. McClellan and Controller Grout."

BOARD OF ELECTIONS GETS JEROME PAPERS

It Will Act on the Substitute Nomination To-morrow.

NO USE, SAYS CHARLES H. KNOX

And Gruber Agrees That Flammer's Name Must Stay on the Official Ballot.

Interest in the Republican campaign yesterday centred chiefly on the outcome of the effort to have the name of William Travers Jerome substituted for that of Charles A. Flammer for District Attorney on the Republican ticket.

The certified records of the reconvened Republican County Convention were taken to the Board of Elections shortly after noon by Herbert Parsons, Henry B. Stimson, and G. R. Hawes. The records were received and the committee was informed that a special meeting of the board would be called probably for Monday to take action on the papers.

Senator Elsberg, who was Chairman of the Republican County Convention and is Mr. Ivins's campaign manager, was asked what would be done if the Board of Elections should reject the certificate of the County Convention substituting the name of Mr. Jerome for that of Judge Flammer.

"We will immediately apply for a writ of mandamus in the Supreme Court," he said.

Charles H. Knox, Chairman of the Tammany Law Committee, had this to say:

"It is up to the board to decide the status of the matter. In my opinion it is too late for the board to recognize the certificate, and I take it for granted that the board will reject it. The law seems to be perfectly plain."

Abraham Gruber, Republican leader of the Twenty-first District, who has consistently opposed the indorsement of Mr. Jerome by the Republican organization, said he had consulted with a dozen Republican lawyers as to the legality of the proposed substitution and that they all firmly believed that the substitution could not be made.

Mr. Ivins was asked what his opinion was of the Hearst campaign as prosecuted so far. He said:

"If Mr. Hearst holds his own, I have no doubt of the result of my election. But the trouble is in sifting the Hearst canvass. At present I am unable to make up my mind whether Mr. Hearst's campaign is to be an omelet or a souffle."

"I notice," said Mr. Ivins, as a new thought occurred to him, "that in Paris last night a lion turned on its keeper and injured him so badly that he is in bed unconscious. This is a trick of wild animals. When there is a controversy between the Tiger and some one else, the Tiger generally gets the best of the controversy."

Recurring to the Hearst movement, Mr. Ivins said he thought that Hearst had Tammany split in the middle.

"What about Republican votes going to McClellan?" was asked.

"I think McClellan will get about 5 per cent. of the Republican cowardice vote," said Mr. Ivins. "This cowardice on the part of Republicans is of the dollar and not of the heart."

A Piano for all time--

That is practically what the Knabe is—a piano at its best, not alone this year and next, but for more than the proverbial "Lifetime"—an instrument that will give continuous pleasure and satisfaction to its users.

Like anything that is the standard of comparison, the Knabe costs more money in the first place than the generality of pianos but the outlay stops after the initial cost. To purchase a Knabe is regarded by those who know as an investment of high character because of its permanency, and for the reason that the dividends come with unfailing regularity in the satisfaction afforded by "the world's best piano."

We shall be glad to demonstrate the value and excellence of the Knabe in the various new styles of Grands and Uprights.

PRUDENTIAL INCLUDED IN INSURANCE INQUIRY

Authority Found in the Law Regulating Outside Companies.

TO CALL SENATOR DRYDEN

Metropolitan and New Jersey Concern Employ the Same Lawyer—Mutual's Advertising Methods.

United States Senator John F. Dryden of New Jersey, President of the Prudential Insurance Company, is to be a witness before the Insurance Investigating Committee, and the affairs of his company, although its head office is in a neighboring State, are to be gone into as thoroughly as those of the New York companies to which the greater part of the committee's time has been devoted so far.

This information came yesterday from counsel for the investigating committee. It was learned at the same time that the Prudential Life and the Metropolitan Life have to a certain extent pooled issues in the investigation by employing Richard V. Lindaberry of Newark as their common counsel.

There has been some question heretofore as to whether the Prudential would come in for such a raking over as the Mutual, New York Life, and Equitable Companies are receiving for the reason that it is in another State. It appears, however, that the authority of the State Insurance Department to revoke the license of any company to do business in New York will be made the basis for demanding of the Prudential as complete information as the committee has deemed it necessary to obtain from the other companies.

This may open some interesting politico-insurance history, for the Prudential has long been as intimately associated with certain phases of legislation at Trenton as the Mutual, the Equitable, and the New York Life have been at Albany. Financial deals of great importance, including one which the Massachusetts Insurance Department exposed two years ago, whereby it was proposed to transfer the control of the Prudential to the Fidelity Trust Company of Newark, will be searchingly reviewed.

The Prudential and the Metropolitan Life both, as well as the John Hancock Life, will be pretty thoroughly canvassed on the subject of industrial insurance, which all three companies feature in their business. This is a topic to which the Armstrong committee intends to give a good deal of attention, following somewhat the developments in the investigation held in Massachusetts a few years ago, which resulted in legislation materially limiting industrial insurance. It is the belief of members of the committee that serious abuses have grown up in the system, particularly as the result of the freedom that the companies enjoy in writing policies on children of any age, and upon persons suffering from diseases which render them improper risks Metropolitan Life and Syndicates.

When John R. Hegeman, President of the Metropolitan Life, goes on the stand at the resumption of the hearings, a good deal of attention will be given to the relations between him and William A. Reade, now head of the banking firm of that name, and formerly a partner in Vermilye & Co. The lists of securities purchased by the Metropolitan already in evidence show that Vermilye & Co. during that firm's existence, more recently Reade & Co., have enjoyed most of the company's business.

An effort will be made to find whether in the Metropolitan, as in the Equitable Life, syndicates were organized to purchase securities from issuing bankers and then were transferred to the company at the prices of public issue or better, when the members of the syndicates got them at the underwriting figures. It has been said that some of these profits in Metropolitan syndicates were as high as 5 points.

Samul B. Clark of 32 Nassau Street, a lawyer, is distributing in pamphlet form the letter he addressed to Counsel Charles E. Hughes of the investigating committee regarding the policy he has in the Mutual Life. Mr. Clark's policy was issued in 1881 for $5,000, and became paid up last year. His initial dividend was $16.85. This was the largest he ever received, for the returns dwindled to $7.51 annually in 1894, then rose to about $16 in 1903, and dropped off again to $2.73 the year after the policy became paid up. This circumstance was explained by Actuary McClintock on the witness stand by the fact that when a policy becomes paid up it is entitled to its share only in the amount of interest earned by the company above the 4 per cent. required for the reserve, and does not participate in the remainder of the net gain derived from the profits on mortality, the profits on canceled policies, and other excess profits.

Dividends on Policies.

Mr. Clark's contention is that as a policy holder in a mutual company he is entitled to his share in the profits of the company and not to such part of the profits as the company may set aside for distribution on the paid-up policies. The contention advanced by Actuary McClintock was that the dividends resulting from the last three sources of net gain mentioned, were not comparable to dividends resulting from profits on operation, but were in effect a return of sums collected as premiums in excess of the requirements of the previous year. On this theory, a policy holder is entitled only to a share in the interest earned on the company's assets in excess of 4 per cent.

Since Mr. Clark wrote his letter it has come out, however, that the determination of the rate of interest theoretically earned by the Mutual and hence the apportionment of the excess over 4 per cent. to the policies is not made upon the actual results of operation, but according to certain artificial standards modified by such other considerations as the company's actuary has sen fit to entertain in his effort to keep the dividends in the right relation to the surplus, and "to keep the policy holders happy," as Mr. McClintock put it.

Some clippings have come to light since the last session of the committee illustrating the kind of stuff that the Mutual Life has paid for as among its advertising expenses. Walter S. Sullivan, the advertising manager of the company, testified on Tuesday that there was formerly in the company's employ, at a salary of $1,200 a year, one G. A. England, who, in addition to preparing general matter on life insurance topics, wrote special stories where there was a chance to work in a little advertising for the Mutual Life or its administration. One of these stories, published in several Maine papers, had to do with the launching of the schooner Robert H. McCurdy at Rockland two years ago this month. Thus does Mr. England lead off his preliminary story:

Some Samples of Advertising.

Sitting in the stocks in Cobb Butler & Co.'s yard to-day is the four-masted schooner, all but ready for the word which will make her the ocean's bride. Designed with a cunning which will rob the sea of its friction and built with a solidity which will defy the tempests, she rests there a thing of beauty and a triumph of naval architecture.

The account goes on with the arrangements for R. H. McCurdy's party at the launching and a description of the schooner. A few days later another story appeared in the same paper telling of the launching and how Mrs. R. H. McCurdy "crashed the neck of a long green bottle and something bubbled forth which might have been spring water, but which smelled suspiciously like a sample of the last day of grace which Rockland was then celebrating." Subsequently the writer remarked:

Among the last persons to cross the plank were the party which had come in a private car attached to the 10:40 train. Conspicuous in this group was Richard A. McCurdy, who for the last eighteen years has been President of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, and whose annual salary is only $100,000. After paying the expenses of the private car from New York and return he had money left. With the millionaire insurance magnate were his son, Robert H. McCurdy, and his son-in-law, Mr. Thibedeau, both accompanied by their wives.

This and other similar expenditures of Mutual Life money are among the things that have come to the attention of the trustees who are pushing the investigation into the management of that company.

Action in Ohio Against the New York and the Mutual.

Special to The New York Times.

AKRON, Ohio, Oct. 28.—Suit to oust the New York Life and the Mutual Life Insurance Companies, and to prevent their doing further business in the State of Ohio, was filed in the Summit County Court of Commou Pleas this afternoon.

The action was brought by County Prosecutor Hagelberger. He will be assisted in the prosecution of the case by ex-Attorney General Frank S. Monnett and George C. Kohler of this city.

The action was brought in the name of an Akron policy holder in the two companies and preparations are being made to carry the case through to the higher courts.

Mr. Kohler has been in the East since Monday collecting evidence and data on which to base the suit, and has held numerous conferences with Mr. Monnett regarding the Ohio licenses of the two companies.

The idea of the petitioners is to force the companies to make restitution to the policy holders of exorbitant salaries paid officials of the companies. The suit asks that the companies' licenses be revoked until this action is taken.

The suit asks that the court appoint Trustees to take charge of the assets of the two companies and hold them for the benefit of the stockholders, the creditors, and the policy holders.

The petition reviews the testimony of the officials of the two companies before the New York Committee and charges mismanagement, fraud, misapplication of funds, and the use of company funds for private gain.

JUSTICE HAS YOUNG CASE.

Argument Closed in Suit Against Former Equitable Officers.

SARATOGA, Oct. 28.—Before Justice Henry T. Kellogg of Plattsburg, in Special Term of the Supreme Court here today, arguments were heard in the action of Mrs. Mary S. Young of Saratoga Springs to have restored funds alleged to have been wasted by the Equitable Life Assurance Society, through the negligence of the defendants, James H. Hyde and other officials.

Louis Marshall of Untermyer, Guggenheimer & Marshall appeared for Mr. Hyde and the defendant company. He argued that the complaint does not state a basis for action, that the action had not the sanction of the Attorney General, and is not within the provisions of Section 55 of the insurance laws of this State. Senator Edgar T. Brackett appeared for Mrs. Young. Judge Kellogg took the papers and reserved decision.

Senator Brackett argued that the action is an equitable one, and in such an action all of the acts of the Directors can be inquired into and relief afforded. He said that the complaint stated a complete cause of action in equity, and alleged that through negligence the loss resulted to the company and as the company was at the time of the beginning of the action in control of the officers and in control of the same influence when the waste occurred, a person interested as a policy holder or a stockholder could maintain an action on behalf of the corporation.

Poisoned Children Chewed Bark.

BURLINGTON, Vt., Oct. 28.—Dr. P. H. McMahon, the physician who attends St. Joseph's Asylum, said this afternoon there was reason to believe that the poisoning on Thursday night of seventeen children, three of whom died, was the result of chewing locust tree bark. Several of the children admitted that they had been chewing this bark, which, he said, contained poison in sufficient quantity to cause illness and even death.

$129,262 TO DIG CANAL, $784,085 FOR SALARIES

Secretary of Commission Tells How $4,009,959 Was Spent.

LITTLE SPENT ON DREDGING

Secretary Taft Declared That Much Preparatory Work Was Necessary —Shonts Denies Friction.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—Just what the Panama Canal Commission has done in the way of drawing and paying salaries and has not done in the matter of digging the canal is revealed by a statement made public to-day by its secretary. This statement was compiled in the office of the Auditor of the commission. It is intended to explain what became of every dollar that was spent by the commission up to June 30, three years after Congress "began work" on the canal by appropriating $10,000,000.

These figures disclose the fact that in the thirty-six months since the cartoonists began to picture Uncle Sam hustling down to the Isthmus of Panama with a big shovel on his shoulder, there has been drawn as salaries by numerous officials the sum of $784,085, while about 17 per cent. of that amount, or $129,262, was spent for "excavation." Of these salaries about one-third, or $202,421, went to those in charge of the men who did the digging.

A total expenditure of $4,009,959 is shown by this statement, and a supplementary statement is promised for early issue which will disclose what was spent between June 30 and Oct. 1. Of this four millions there is charged to "canal construction" $694,292, or about 17 per cent.

Of the $581,663 for salaries drawn by men not engaged, according to the statement, in "excavation" $14,329 was for the special Commissioners appointed to help the regular Commissioners to make up their minds as to what to do, and $5,783 was in the office of the Committee on Engineering. The rest was divided among the Department of Administration, which got $124,920; the Department of Government and Sanitation, $67,305, and the Department of Construction and Engineering, $231,610.

Besides these items there was spent for sanitation $208,641; for hospitals and asylums, $169,825; for construction of water works, sewers, and roads, $196,038. Police and prisons absorbed $67,594. Machine shop expenses took $167,841, and repairs to equipment $75,524. Incidentally there was expended $365,100 for the construction and repair of buildings, $54,715 for the purchase of the shops at La Boca and for other land and buildings, and $155,657 for the purchase of Panama Railroad stock.

The largest item is for material, supplies, and equipment purchased irrespective of that included in other charges. This took $1,087,726, of which $834,716 was spent in the United States and $202,680 on the Isthmus. The cost of purchase, handling, and transportation of all this material was $250,887, of which $206,750, more than four-fifths, went to the material and supplies division on the Isthmus.

Of the $694,292 spent for "canal construction," the division which includes the great Culebra cut absorbed most. The office of the chief engineer of this division received $122,043, and the resident engineer $35,137 additional. For "excavation" $118,120 was spent. There is a charge of $36,510 for "dumps," another of $24,965 for "mining," and one of $137,241 for railroad tracks.

When some criticism of the delay in digging on the Isthmus appeared in various newspapers recently, it was explained at the Washington offices of the commission that the commission had found no docks at Panama or Colon suitable for the work, and the harbors were not in condition to receive the necessary shipping.

In the items of expenditure now disclosed is a charge of $1,965 for "docks at Colon," and another of $1,854 for "harbor dredging." "Excavating and dredging material" cost $21,050, about one-half of 1 per cent. of the total amount spent by the commission in three years. On "repairs to excavating and dredging material" was spent $6,319.

There is in the expenses of the Culebra Division a charge of $2,012 for "tools," followed immediately by another of $11,242 for "repairs of tools," and another of $19,393 for "contingent expenses."

Just before leaving Washington for the Isthmus, Secretary Taft made some explanation of these figures.

"The first examination of conditions down there," he said, "disclosed the fact that there would have to be an immense amount of work done in preparing the ground for the actual work of digging the canal. The place was in a terribly unsanitary condition, and the first thing to do was to make it sanitary. Then it was essential that everything should be in readiness in the way of plant and equipment before a large force of men was sent to shovel dirt. It was estimated that it would require two years to accomplish all this, and we have now had about fourteen months of it."

When questioned about the very small charges for excavation revealed by the Auditor's statement, the Secretary said:

"That is because there has been no attempt as yet to work on a large scale. What has been done has been merely in the way of arriving at an accurate estimate of cost. For instance, a certain machine will be worked until it is found just what it will accomplish and what it costs. In that way only small sums have been spent for the actual removal of dirt, but what has been done is all in the line of the needed work. As soon as the plan of the canal is decided upon, and the remainder of the equipment has been purchased and delivered, a different condition will be revealed."

The sanitary work in the canal zone seems to be nearer completion than that of any other department. Nine hospitals are maintained by the commission, with three quarantine stations, two detention barracks, and a convalescent station. The work authorized contemplates the expenditure of $400,000 for water works and sewers at Panama and Colon and of an additional $425,000 for street paving at Panama.

Chairman Shonts of the Canal Commission to-day issued a signed statement denying that there is any friction between Secretary Taft and himself.

SECRETARY TAFT SAILS.

Cruiser Columbia to Land Him in Colon This Week.

NORFOLK, Va., Oct. 28.—The fleet cruiser Columbia passed out the Capes of Virginia at 10:15 o'clock this morning, flying the pennant of Secretary of War Taft and bearing the party who left Washington last evening bound for the Isthmus of Panama.

Secretary Taft and other officials arrived at Old Point Comfort early this morning and immediately transferred to the cruiser Columbia, which lost no time in getting under way. The Columbia is expected to reach Colon early next week, and Secretary Taft will spend a week or ten days on the Isthmus, returning to Washington about Nov. 15.

SAFE BURGLARS ARE BUSY.

Five Robberies in as Many Towns—One Man Shot.

Special to The New York Times.

MARGARETSVILLE, N. Y., Oct. 28.—Frank Graham, 22 years of age, was shot and probably fatally wounded by bank burglars while returning from seeing his sweetheart in Andes, Linn Bruce's home town, at 1 o'clock this morning. Graham passed the bank building, and seeing a light there, which was unusual, stopped and looked in at the window. The robbers promptly fired at him, and then decamped, without having got any booty.

JAMESTOWN, N. Y., Oct. 28.—Burglars effected an entrance to the Post Office at Falconer, early this morning, blew open the safe, and partially wrecked the building. They secured $100 in cash and between $500 and $600 in stamps.

SHAWMUT, Me., Oct. 28.—Burglars who blew open the Post Office safe in the general store of C. Guy Hume, here today, obtained $400 in money. Sparks from the explosive used set the store on fire, causing a loss of $3,500.

HAGERSTOWN, Ind., Oct. 28.—A dozen burglars blew open with dynamite the vault in the New National Bank early this morning and escaped with over $9,000 after exchanging a lively fusillade with townspeople who had been aroused by the explosion. Nobody was hurt.

WINDFALL, Ind., Oct. 28.—Burglars entered the People's Bank early to-day and after breaking off the lock of the safe with hammers exploded two charges of dynamite. The thieves, however, failed to blow open the door of the safe, and were frightened away.

Gigantic Waste of Public Printing in Washington.

LANDIS COMMITTEE EVIDENCE

No Demand for Over a Million Documents in House, and 542,354 in Senate Folding Rooms.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—The gigantic proportions of the waste of public printing was told before the Landis Committee by three or four men who know better than any others just what the facts are.

Amzi Smith, the venerable Superintendent of the Senate Document Room, said that Senators had documents bound and forced on them whether they wanted them or not. He urged that Acting Public Printer Ricketts's recommendation that the reserve be eliminated, and that Senators have what copies they desire bound from their original copies, be adopted.

The committee was anxious to have him give some idea as to the increase of printing since he came to the Capitol, over forty years ago. He said that since he became Superintendent of Documents for the Senate the amount of Government printing had increased four fold. "For instance," said he, "there were more bills introduced in the first ten days of the Fifty-seventh Congress than were introduced during the whole Thirty-eighth and Thirty-ninth Congresses."

Mr. A. H. Brewer, foreman of the Senate folding room, said he had 204,000 copies of the Department of Agriculture Year Book on hand which no one seemed to want. The department prints 500,000 every year. It is a fine octavo, expensively illustrated. Each Senator is entitled to 1,188 of these books, but few take the trouble to get them out to their constituents.

He submitted a statement showing that there are in the Senate folding room at the present time 66,710 volumes of Congressional Records, 210,296 Geological Survey publications, 26,079 War Department publications, 16,736 Interior Department publications, 204,060 Agricultural Department publications, and 18,221 abridgements of messages and documents, a total of 542,354 documents published by the Government Printing Office, and for which there was absolutely no demand.

Sergeant at Arms Daniel Ransdell told the committee that the Government printed too much. He said that he had to hire a huge unused horse car barn to hold the books that were being piled in on him, and for which there seemed to be no demand. He said he had no authority to touch a document that had been assigned to a Senator and placed in the warehouse. There it must stay until the Senator did something with it.

J. R. Halvorson, Superintendent of the House folding room, told the committee he had over 1,000,000 bound documents that would probably never be distributed.

Colored Preacher Kills a Man.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, Oct. 28.—Because the Rev. James Allen Watson, a colored preacher, would not allow her to cook on a stove in a flat they shared, Mrs. J. E. Christopher rushed upon him with a razor, and in a fight which followed her husband was slashed to death. Mrs. Christopher and the minister were locked up. Two razors were lying upon a table. As the woman rushed upon him with one razor, the preacher reached for the other and sprang upon her husband, who was about to strike him.

CLEVELAND DEPLORES MAD HUNT FOR WEALTH

Speaks at the Unveiling of a Statue of J. Sterling Morton.

PLEADS VALUE OF CHARACTER

Monument Erected to the Founder of Arbor Day in Nebraska City Draws Notable Men.

NEBRASKA CITY, Neb., Oct. 28.—Grover Cleveland made an appeal for appreciation of character by the American people in an address to-day at the unveiling of a statue to J. Sterling Morton, founder of Arbor Day, who was Secretary of Agriculture under Mr. Cleveland.

Mr. Cleveland and party arrived from Chicago at 9:30 o'clock, and went to Arbor Lodge, where they were the guests of Joy Morton. Adlai E. Stevenson, Paul Morton, Mark Morton, ex-Secretary Hilary A. Herbert, David R. Francis, James H. Eckels, and others came for the ceremonies.

The statue was unveiled this afternoon in Morton Park. It stands upon a massive pedestal, at the foot of which stands a wood sprite, her left hand tenderly protecting a young, growing tree. A semicircular stone bench stands at some distance back of the pedestal, and forming a frieze around it are the words "Pioneer-Statesman, Scholar, Tree Planter." Upon the pedestal is inscribed "J. Sterling Morton, Father of Arbor Day. 'Plant Trees.'" Rudolps Evans of New York designed the statue.

Mr. Cleveland made the principal address. He said:

"I have not come to the surviving family of J. Sterling Morton, and to those who were his intimate friends and neighbors, for the purpose of bringing from afar superfluous recital of his virtues and mental endowments.

"You who, within the sacred precincts of his home, knew the warmth of his love; you, who daily found cheer and delight in the sunlight of his steady, constant friendship, and you, his immediate fellow-citizens, who have been stirred to admiration and attachment of his unselfish and effective labor in behalf of those with whom his lot was cast, need no words of mine to arouse in your minds the sentiments which befit this commemorative occasion. Even though all were silent, the beautiful monument here erected would itself eloquently signify the love and friendship and admiration which are to-day revived by the recollection of an affectionate, dutiful, and useful life.

"But I am not here without a mission. I would fain interpret this monument's message to me, as it recalls my close companionship and co-operation, in the discharge of the highest public duty, with the man we honor. I am here to give evidence concerning the things he revealed to me in the light of that companionship and co-operation.

"This is but to testify to his lofty civic righteousness, his simple and sure standards of public morality, his stern insistence on official honesty, his sturdy adherence to opinions deliberately and conscientiously adopted, his generous concession to others of every result of their efforts, and his passionate desire to serve the best interests of his fellow-countrymen.

High Ideals in Public Life.

"I am not required, for the sake of exaggerated tribute, to insist that in the mere possession of these virtues, our friend was distinguished above all others. But it must be said that he stood out from amidst a vast congregation of others who believed and knew the right, because in defense of the right as he believed and knew it, he was willing to fight and suffer, not only in a small arena of private and social existence, but in the fiercer, deadlier amphitheatre of public life.

"He believed that the same care and good faith exacted by a trust undertaken for an individual were due to the people from those who assumed official responsibilities; and he believed that waste in public expenditure was sin. These beliefs were not in his mind mere comfortable sentiments, mildly stimulating to self-righteousness, but were active incentives to battle.

"The noxious atmosphere of governmental extravagance could not blind his eyes; nor could the ridicule of those who had learned to scoff at official economy, or the threats of those who perfidiously contrived to appropriate public funds to private gain, drive him to compromise with wrong.

"Bold and defiant in the midst of it all, he took brave counsel of conscience, as did the dauntless Father of the Reformation, who cried out to his tormentors: 'I cannot and will not retract anything; for to act against conscience is unsafe and unholy.'

"Thus was it that our friend's fine moral perception and his love of rectitude shed a bright and unwavering light on the path of official obligation; and thus did his clear discernment of duty lend impressiveness to his efforts toward the highest usefulness in public office. It was, however, his keen intelligence and his worldly wisdom that taught him that an effective equipment for the best public service needed a large admixture of sterner stuff, and there was never a servant of the people who, in their cause, met misrepresentation and unjust accusation with more fortitude, or saw the submergence of friendly relations with more resignation, or dealt harder blows to dishonesty and wrong, whether lurking with friends or foes.

"As a pioneer among the settlers of the great West, he espoused with affectionate zeal every movement or interest that promised its development and prosperity, but even this he did with such strict subordination to the commands of conscience and with such courageous reliance upon the strength that comes of clear conviction, that in advocating his beliefs on economic and financial topics he did not hesitate to attack the opinions and prejudices of those with whom he had made his home. There was no bitterness of heart in all this, but there was the positive, rugged earnestness of a strong, determined man, quite content to trust time and sober second thought for his vindication.

"We shall do violence to the moral sense which God has vouchsafed to humanity if amid these surroundings we close our minds to the truth that character represents the real value of a man according to the unalterable standard of fine gold, and that it differs immeasurably from reputation, which measures a man's worth by the shifting and untrue standards of mean ambition or successful cupidity.

Wrecks of Characterless Men.

"We have fallen upon days when our people are more than ever turning away from their old faith in the saving grace of character and flocking to the worship of money-making idols. Daily and hourly, in the light of investigation and exposure, characterless lives are seen in appalling numbers, without chart or compass, crowded upon the rocks and shoals of faithlessness and breach of trust.

"How ill have these wrecked lives exchanged the safe course and the harbor of honor and usefulness which character and rectitude point out for a wild and headlong rush over unknown seas in a consuming search for pelf!"

HUNGARIAN REFORM PLAN.

Includes Universal Secret and Direct Suffrage.

BUDAREST, Oct. 28.—Premier Fejervary has issued the Government's programme of reforms.

The main points of it provide for universal secret and direct suffrage and the maintenance of the joint customs territory until 1917, when it is expected the establishment of an independent customs territory will be possible.

Baron Fejervary points out that the transfer of Hungarian officers to Hungarian regiments has already been commenced. The men will be trained in the Hungarian language in all regiments in which that language is understood, and the military style of such regiments will be changed.

The Government contemplates granting small farm holdings to farmers and converting the mortgage debt of small landed proprietors. The programme also includes provisions for compulsory insurance of workmen, taxation reforms, and compulsory free education.

Premier Fejervary announces that in the event of the programme not obtaining a majority in the Diet, the lower house will be dissolved and new elections ordered.

NEW TREATY WITH CHINA WILL MAKE CONCESSIONS

Merchants' Assistants to be Taken Out of Coolie Class.

BETTER DETENTION QUARTERS

Two Other Modifications of Law to be Proposed—Convention Will Soon Be Ready.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—The new treaty with China to modify the present exclusion law will be ready to be sent to the Senate before the holidays. The President's message will treat of the general subject in the light of the report made by Secretary Taft on his return from the East, where he held a conference in the presence of Sir Matthew Hathan with prominent Chinamen and learned their demands in the way of amendment of the present law.

It is learned on good authority that the treaty will embody at least four distinct modifications of the existing law. The first will be a careful definition of what constitutes a laborer. The aim of the present statute is to exclude the coolie. Under the interpretation given to this word by the Bureau of Immigration and its agents the line is drawn strictly against clerks and salesmen and experts of the commercial class who are not precisely merchants but play an important part in trade matters and often want to come to the United States in company with their employers. The treaty would take such men out of the coolie class.

The demand of the Chinese Government that certificates of intending visitors to the United States shall be final when bearing the signatures of the proper Chinese officials and the American Consul will be included.

A further exception to the present law will be made in the case of those Chinamen who have taken out their papers in Hongkong or Tonkin or the Straits Settlements and become subjects of Great Britain, France, or Holland. Such persons are now barred. They usually are not of the coolie class, but gentlemen of wealth and education. It is proposed to provide that they may obtain passports, countersigned by an American Consul, which shall be honored at any port in this country.

Another thing that China demands is better detention quarters. The richest merchant or the most learned scholar from China is now confined in case of any doubt as to his status or rights in a place fit hardly for the lowest born coolie, and the intelligent and high-born Chinamen resent this treatment. It is not to be doubted that the American Government will regard this as a reasonable demand, and it will probably be complied with, making the fourth modification.

There are numerous details to be embodied in the treaty, but those outlined above are the main ones. The President and Secretary Taft on the one hand and the Chinese Government on the other are practically agreed on them.

MARCONI COMPANY LOSES.

Judge Townsend Refused to Dissolve the De Forest Injunction.

Judge Townsend, in the United States Circuit Court, refused yesterday to vacate an order issued on May 20 at the instance of the De Forest Wireless Telegraph Company, suspending the injunction granted against the Marconi Company in its suit against the De Forest Company for alleged infringement of patents.

Last May Judge Townsend handed down an exhaustive opinion in the case rejecting the Marconi Company's broad claim covering the entire wireless telegraph field, but at the same time sustained that part of the Marconi Company's contention relating to the construction of the elevated structure used in sending and receiving messages. Upon this latter finding an injunction was issued, but the defendants got an order suspending the operation of the injunction pending an appeal. Recently the Marconi Company attempted to have this last order vacated, which Judge Townsend by his latest order denies.

The final outcome of the case rests with the decision of the United States Court of Appeals.

SPANISH CRUISER SUNK.

The Cardinal Cisneros Struck a Rock —All on Board Saved.

FERROL, Sprain, Oct. 28.—The Spanish cruiser Cardinal Cisneros sank near Muros, Province of Corunna, to-day after striking a rock. The crew were saved.

The Cardinal Cisneros was an armored cruiser of 6,889 tons and 15,000 horse power. She was built in 1902 at Ferrol, Spain, was about 347 feet long, had 60¼ feet beam, drew 25 feet of water, and cost $3,000,000. The cruiser had eight inches of armor, and her armament consisted of two eleven-inch guns, eight 5.5-inch guns, and a number of smaller guns.

She was recently detailed with other Spanish warships to proceed to the coast of Morocco to obtain redress for depredations against Spanish merchant ships, but does not appear to have started on her mission.

KING VISITS OUR CRUISER.

Victor Emmanuel at Genoa Inspects the Minneapolis.

GENOA, Italy, Oct. 28.—King Victor Emmanuel, who is here to inaugurate the new harbor works, unexpectedly visited the harbor this morning and found himself in the midst of 6,000 workmen, who gave him a frantically enthusiastic reception.

The King, accompanied by his whole staff, boarded the United States cruiser Minneapolis, and was received with royal honors. Capt. Miller met him at the gangway, and he inspected the whole ship and conversed with the officers for about an hour.

BURGLARS PLAYED POKER IN HOUSE THEY ROBBED

Drank Their Victim's Wine and Smoked His Cigarettes.

FOUR KINGS ENDED THE GAME

Robbers May Have Slept in the House —It Is Near Police Commissioner McAdoo's Home.

While the family of Edwin C. Anderson of 112 West Fifty-eighth Street was out of the city burglars broke into the house and carried off some pictures and other valuables. The robbers made themselves comfortable while packing up their booty.

The police of the West Forty-seventh Street Station think that the thieves may have slept in the house. At any rate, they had a royal time. They played a game of poker, and of course had to have refreshments. A dozen bottles of wine from the Anderson cellar supplied this, and they smoked a lot of fancy cigarettes that they found on the sideboard.

That there were three of the burglars is indicated by the fact that three glasses were found on the table in the dining room. There were also three poker hands, the cards lying face upward, as they had been left when the game ended. In one of the hands were four kings. Another was a jack full. The third was a busted heart flush.

Mr. Anderson, who is an insurance broker, with an office at 50 Pine Street, returned to New York Friday, found that his house had been looted, and notified the police. The Anderson home is just around the corner from the residence of Police Commissioner McAdoo, and was once occupied by Inspector Byrnes. The Kinloch apartment hotel, in which Anna Pulitzer was killed by William Hooper Young, is just across the street.

The burglars paid particular attention to the paintings, of which Mr. Anderson was very proud, carefully lifting the pictures from the wall and removing the canvases whole. Mr. Anderson said that his loss was at least $1,500, and that the burglars, besides stealing several paintings, made away with a lot of cut glass and clothing. He thinks that they did their work ten days or two weeks before he returned to New York.

"They gained entrance through the skylight," he said, "reaching my roof from the roof of an apartment house adjoining. The house was thoroughly ransacked, but I really feel indebted to the marauders in that they were not malicious. Not a single article of furniture or work of art was wilfully destroyed. The safe in the library was dragged out into the centre of the room, but no attempt was made to blow it open.

"They left behind many valuable paintings that had been removed from their frames. This would seem to indicate that the thieves were disturbed. The thieves had some knowledge of art, as the pictures chosen for removal were the pick of my collection."

STABS THREE ON SHIP.

Maniac in La Lorraine's Steerage Saved from Suicide After Attack.

La Lorraine's passengers, when she arrived yesterday, told an exciting story about a stabbing affray in the steerage last Sunday, when the liner was a day and a half out of Havre. Michael Pugneto of Butte, Mon., had been visiting his old home in Italy, and went insane. He stabbed two stewards and the orderly of Dr. Potel, La Lorraine's surgeon; then cut his own throat and dashed through the cabin in an attempt to reach the railing on the promenade deck and jump into the sea.

The steerage was thrown into a panic by the man's strange actions last Sunday. Capt. Poncelet sent down Baume, the orderly, who managed to get the man to the ship's hospital. While two stewards stood guard at the door Baume watched his patient during the night. The next morning, when he left, Pugneto began to scream so wildly that the orderly was recalled. As Baume entered the hospital the madman jumped on him and slashed his throat, severing an artery. Leaping over the orderly, Pugneto rushed out of the room, striking right and left at the other steerage passengers, the two stewards closely following. The stewards seized the maniac just as he had climbed to the top of the rail and stood ready to jump.

They were dragging Pugneto back to the hospital, when a number of steerage passengers thought one of their number was being maltreated and piled on the stewards in an effort to rescue Pugneto. In the struggle the Italian managed to pull his knife and stabbed the stewards, inflicting a scalp wound on one and a gash on a shoulder of the other. Then the passengers understood the situation and helped overpower Pugneto, who was locked up.

Baume had the presence of mind to put his closed fist into the gash, stopping the flow of blood until help reached him. Although Pugneto has half a dozen wounds in his throat he will recover. He had written a note in Italian, which said:

"Dear Mother: They are trying to kill me. I am going to leave it all. Meet me in heaven."

THE LAST CZAR.

There must very soon be a change either for the better or for the worse in Russia. An uprising of the people so widespread and general cannot long remain at any fixed stage; for either revolutionists begin to gain upon the Government or the Government begins to gain upon them. Two very grave evidences of weakening authority were to be observed in yesterday's news. The Czar, it was reported, had countermanded TREPOFF'S order to the troops to use ball cartridges in dealing with the mob. At the time of the disturbances in St. Petersburg last Winter it was made evident that the insurgents could make no headway against the 100,000 troops that the Government could use against them. Either because the present uprising is so much more formidable or because the Czar has reason to doubt the loyalty of his troops, the repressive measures that then succeeded are not now employed. Probably the Czar's motive in countermanding TREPOFF'S order was not mercy. If it was fear, then the end of the autocracy must be at hand. There is military force enough to restore order in St. Petersburg if only it were sternly employed and could be trusted.

The second indication was the setting up of what was called an independent Government in Moscow. This is probably only a committee of safety. Constituted authority having broken down, a new local governing body is set up by the voluntary coming together of men of prominence not unfriendly to the revolutionists. When the Second Empire crumbled a provisional Government which was in effect a National Committee of Safety was set up in Paris. It will everywhere be perceived that an independent though provisional Government could not be set up in Moscow unless the Czar's authority and imperial dignity had become seriously diminished.

If the uprising has passed the stage of forcible repression it is not easy to see what is going to check it. The Czar must have come to the conclusion that it is a movement of national and revolutionary magnitude. If he cannot put it down there would seem to be but two courses open to him—he must either concede substantially everything the revolutionists demand or he must abdicate and run away to save his head.

The vitally important thing now is the leadership of the revolutionary movement. If capable and courageous leaders come to the fore, as they had already come to the fore in this country when we declared our independence, and as they came to the fore in the early stages of the French Revolution, the transition from the autocratic rule of the Czar to a constitutional kingdom may be effected without violent disturbance. But if the revolutionists are left to themselves—that is, to the guidance of the demagogues who always put themselves forward at such a moment—scenes of unimaginable horror will be witnessed in Russia. Social chaos in a great empire is not a pleasant thing to think of, for not only the Government machinery breaks down, but all commercial, industrial, and economic organization crumbles.

Even if the Czar should betake himself to some place of safety abroad and a constitutional Government should be promptly established, there would be weeks of confusion and great incidental suffering. If railroad transportation is not resumed at once there will be famine, not only in the great cities, but in all parts of Russia. But the abdication of an absolute monarch, the sudden setting up of a Constitution, and the installing of a new ruler are not circumstances that promote the smooth and efficient working of a railroad or of any piece of industrial machinery. Before the men go back to work they will have to be sure that somebody is going to pay them, and before any railroad company begins to pay out money it will want to know how long the new Government is going to last.

The one encouraging fact of the situation is the new prominence and power of Count WITTE. He is not only an able and wise man, but he is pre-eminently a man of competence in administration. If he can get on at all with the revolutionary leaders, if they will submit themselves to his guidance, and if, recognizing that he has to deal with revolutionists, not with insurrectionists, he shall have the wisdom to guide them loyally toward the establishment of liberal institutions, the crisis may soon be passed, and the work of upbuilding will begin. Whatever happens, it is evident that the conditions of the past cannot be restored. Russia can never be quite the same. The strikes, agitations, and revolts have extended over a very great part of the empire, indicating a common sentiment and a common purpose among the participants in the movement. They have somehow come to a consciousness of themselves, a consciousness of their wrongs and their sufferings, a consciousness of their power. When that happened in France, LOUIS XVI., looking about him, decided that it was high time to take to his heels, and he was already too late. History is being made pretty rapidly in Russia just now, and it is not at all improbable, when this current chapter has been written, that the name of NICHOLAS will appear therein as the last of the Russian Czars.

THE RUSSIAN "CONSTITUTION."

Count WITTE'S declaration of a desire for a Constitution which shall create a Ministry "responsible alike to the Crown and the representatives of the people" may be fairly taken in connection with the declaration of what seems to be a well-founded dispatch to a London newspaper that the Czar has determined to "grant a Constitution similar to that of Germany." The Czar's present procedures may be assumed to be based upon the advice of Count WITTE. The two statements taken together indicate that the new Russian Premier, if he may be called so, has not yet thoroughly thought out the tremendous problem he has to confront, nor risen to the height of this great argument.

Small blame to him if this be so. It is inconceivable that there should exist in Russia a statesman who is also a political philosopher. The conditions of Russian politics have prevented any Russian from enjoying the experience which would have made him such. The administrative work of Russia has been intrusted to men, including Count WITTE himself, who have accepted the conditions which they found, and forborne to speculate upon any possible improvement in them. On the other hand are mere speculators, "closet philosophers," crack-brained theorists whose theories have not been counterchecked by any experience at all in the working of institutions. Neither class is competent to frame a Constitution for Russia. And yet to these two classes of the opportunists and the dreamers poor Russia appears to be restricted for her Constitution-makers.

Count WITTE'S notion of "a Ministry responsible alike to the Crown and to the representatives of the people" is a mere dream. Such a Ministry cannot exist. No man and no Ministry can serve two masters. We know what a British Ministry is. It is a Ministry responsible to the representatives of the people. We know what a German Ministry is. It is a Ministry responsible to the Crown. If Count VON BUELOW should have the misfortune to displease WILHELM II., we all know what would happen to him. We all know what did happen to a far abler and stronger predecessor of his, and one with far more claims upon the gratitude of the German people, OTTO VON BISMARCK, who incurred that misfortune. But if a strong and popular British Prime Minister should incur the displeasure of EDWARD VII., it would make no difference except in their personal relations. It is true that King EDWARD'S personal preferences might exert some influence in a political condition like the present, when there is no real leader in sight on either side, and when each party is in an acephalous condition. But GEORGE III. was the last King of England who attempted to contravene the nation's clear choice of a Prime Minister, and even his experience was not encouraging. Queen VICTORIA did indeed manage to make good her personal objections to the choice of a subordinate member of the Ministry, at the expense of Mr. LABOUCHERE. King EDWARD might manage to make his good at the expense of Mr. GEORGE BERNARD SHAW, if that hustling cynic were in politics instead of in the show business. But against a more serious political personage than either he could do nothing. It is common knowledge that Queen VICTORIA loathed Mr. GLADSTONE—very likely as much as, on different grounds, she loathed "LABBY," who at the worst was never a bore. Yet her personal antipathy went for nothing at all in the face of Mr. GLADSTONE'S popularity. On the other hand, suppose that the opinion of "the representatives of the people," in the Reichstag assembled, should unmistakably indicate Herr RICHTER, or even Herr BEBEL, as the choice of that body for Reichskanzler. Does anybody imagine that effect would be given by imperial appointment to such a choice of the confidential parliamentary agent of the German Emperor, which is what the Imperial Chancellor really is? No! The plain fact is that not only is the notion of a Ministry "responsible alike to the Crown and the representatives of the people" not merely an irrealizable dream, it is a contradiction in terms.

The attribution to Count WITTE, or to his "Master," and pupil, of an intention to give Russia a Constitution "similar to that of Germany" is very significant. The German Constitution is not a model for that of any other country. It is a piece of patchwork, a thing of shreds and patches. The German Empire was the child of the North German Confederation, a "zollverein," or customs union, organized for a particular purpose and not otherwise meant to be a political union at all. Just so, one may say, is the Constitution of the United States a child of the Articles of Confederation, which also recorded an agreement for a particular purpose. But, in the remodeling of the Confederation into "a more perfect union," there was just that element of political philosophy practicalized by political experience of which we have noted the lack in the present equipment of Russia for the work of transformation. The lack of that element is equally notable in the Constitution of the Empire of Germany. That is, as we have said, a collection of makeshifts, a series of regulations, often so petty as not to be properly matters even of statute, but only of the administration of bureaus. It was a series of concessions to the susceptibilities of the States which were the contracting parties. So, it may be said, was the Constitution of the United States. But over the formation of the Constitution of the United States there presided precisely that spirit of political philosophy checked by political experience which made Mr. GLADSTONE call it the greatest effort of constitutional statesmanship ever shaped at a single stroke of the will and purpose of man. The framers undertook, not to foresee every detail of conflict which might arise, but to lay down principles upon which the relations of the constituent States with the Constitution of the United States might be adjusted, and they provided a tribunal which should apply these principles to details as details might arise. And, so, by one of our greatest strokes of good fortune, JOHN MARSHALL came to consolidate the work of JEFFERSON and HAMILTON and MADISON.

There is nothing of all this in the German Constitution, which it is left to the Bundesrath, or, as we should say, the Senate, to construe. But the German Constitution has this in common with the American, that it is a Federal Constitution. For this reason it is absolutely inapplicable to the uses of Russia, in which centralization is carried as far as it ever was carried in France itself, and in which the "provinces," far from being constituent communities, are mere subdivisions formed for administrative convenience.

This fact makes the announced purpose of the Czar to grant a Constitution "similar to that of Germany" a mysterious and, on the face of it, a meaningless announcement. Nevertheless, it has a meaning. The Kaiser is not a Czar. He is far from being a Czar. In some respects he has less power than the President of the United States, since the President at least has a veto power against a mere majority of the Legislature, which the Kaiser has not. But, far as he is from being a Czar, the Kaiser is yet nearer to being a Czar than any other ruler in Europe. Perhaps this is only another way of saying that, next to Russia, Germany is the most politically backward country in Europe. But the declaration at least denotes that the Czar, while giving up what he must, will give up as little as he can. We cannot blame him. We would have reason to blame him more if by a stroke of the pen he undertook to put Russia on a political equality with nations so much more advanced. But events are moving fast in Russia. It is likely to be not for the Czar but for the Russian people to say whether and how far the "grant" of a Constitution "similar to that of Germany" will suit Russia.

MR. JEROME AND THE REPUBLICAN TICKET.

It is a great pity that the name of Mr. JEROME cannot readily and without delay be placed on the official ballot under the Republican emblem. It clearly belongs there by the will of the party expressed through its authorized representatives. If the Board of Elections should print it there, there is not the slightest reason to suppose that the courts would interfere, or that they would permit a single vote cast in that form to be taken away from Mr. JEROME. For the law in such matters regards only the essential purpose of the statute, and the courts will see that that is accomplished if practicable without reference to minor details of proceeding. It may be that the courts will yet take action to require the Board of Elections to put Mr. JEROME'S name under the Republican emblem on the official ballot, though we are unable, from a close examination of the act, to discover grounds for such action. If that cannot be done, then it is the special duty of all intelligent supporters of the District Attorney to make perfectly sure that they understand how to vote for him, and that they instruct all whom they can reach who are liable to be misled in that regard.

Meanwhile the agitation and discussion that have taken place with reference to the ballot will serve the purpose of arousing attention to the matter, and errors will be fewer. They will also serve to arouse attention to the defects in the ballot law, and possibly to secure its amendment. It is absurd that provisions of such a purely technical nature, having reference to methods only and not at all to the exact expression of the voter's will, should be so stiff and arbitrary that they may often defeat the very purpose of the law. We should feel more confident that the law would be amended were it not that it was drawn in the first instance with the covert intention to make independent voting difficult and to retain the mechanism of the ballot under the absolute control of the party machines. The only entirely fair and reasonable form of ballot is that used in Massachusetts, where the names of the candidates for each office are printed in succession under the title of the office. That might be modified in the interest of the illiterate voter by permitting the party emblem to be placed opposite the name of the candidate of the party for each office. With such a ballot and the right of any party to change the name of any candidate at any time previous to the actual printing of the ballots, the independent voter would come by his rights, or pretty nearly.

THE RAILWAY RATE WAR.

Railway rate regulation is such a humdrum matter to all except those who pay the freight that it is refreshing to have a little comic relief infused into the situation. If anything could be more absurd than Mr. BACON'S packed convention it would be the one which was fixed to differ from it. Mr. JEROME'S account of the free and open manner in which Tammany nominated its candidate for District Attorney alone can do justice to the manner in which the respective conventions adopted opposing resolutions. Like Tammany, they "waited and waited and waited" until somebody handed in the resolutions, and then all was over except adjourning. This is not the way to make progress with a difficult topic, and is a good example of the objection to having economic matters dealt with in a political manner. The entire proceedings reeked with politics, personal politics, partisan politics, railway politics. Of judicious consideration there was not a trace, but a superfluity of heat and ascription of motives.

However, some progress must be reported if only by the limitation of the future usefulness if not the activities of Mr. BACON'S organization, which heretofore has posed as the shippers' champion. Now the shippers say they do not want Mr. BACON'S championship, through representatives of 456 trade and industrial organizations, as their resolutions recite. How comes it that Mr. BACON'S services are not appreciated? If you ask any manufacturer whether he wishes to be "protected" the answer is axiomatic, for protection means high prices. So it might seem that if you asked any shipper whether he wanted railway rates regulated he could not say no, for regulation has been considered synonymous with reduction. But there are, it seems, an increasing number who perceive the truth of what THE TIMES long since asserted, that Governmental regulation means less reduction than fixation, and perhaps increase. A Government rate, whether called a maximum or a minimum, is a standard imposed by a body which feels indirectly, if at all, pressure for alteration in either direction. Competition would be checked, and there would be quite as likely a leveling up as a leveling down.

This would not be agreeable to the shippers, and, strange as it may seem to some, neither would it be what the railways want. The old maxim used to be to charge as much as the traffic would bear. The new dispensation is to charge whatever will move the greatest amount of traffic. There is a community of interest between the railway and the shipper, for neither makes profit unless the traffic is moved, and both profit if it is moved. That American rates are the world's lowest and the service the best is indisputable on the record. There are abuses in the situation, but they are irregularities, not extortions. Government-made rates are no remedy of the shippers' real complaints.

ONE OF THE DELUSIONS.

Mr. W. R. HEARST, as reported by all the papers, including his own, is promising increased wages to the employés of the Municipality, to the policemen, to the firemen, to the street cleaners. In fact, his programme is very much that of a preceding demagogue, Jack Cade by name, as reported by the late WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE:

There shall be in England seven halfpenny loaves sold for a penny, the three-hooped pot shall have ten hoops, and I will make it felony to drink small beer.

It does not seem to occur to the Hearst "rooters" that a favored class of employés, who get wages above what they can get in the open market, can get such wages only at the expense of the unfavored classes, whose wages are fixed in the open market. Apparently "Labor" generally suffers from the delusion that it can improve its condition at the sole expense of "Capital," that some unknown millionaires, living now at their ease, are going to assume the cost of these higher wages. If the millionaires unknown would only do this, all might yet be well. But everybody who knows anything about these matters knows that the millionaires, when their tax bills are swollen by the success of William R. Cade or Jack Hearst, will simply "pass it on," and will pass it on at the expense of the very simple citizens who are now "whooping it up" for HEARST. There will be a satisfaction in seeing the Hearst voters stand up to be counted.

THE SYRIAN RIOT.

The Syrians carry their war habits with them wherever they go, and it was to be expected that their colony here, or the chief one, on the lower west side, with an outlook on the protecting figure of the Bedlow's Island Goddess of Liberty not far off, would sooner or later break out into commotion, and the trumpet for a battle of the Armageddon type, without truce or quarter, be sounded among them. That is what has just happened and is likely to happen again with wearisome reiteration unless something can be done to the expatriated Canaanites and Samaritans to take the fight out of them or disperse its attenuated ardors along the lines of trinket peddling and the one-horse grocery business. Most of them are engaged in these pursuits and there should be in them nothing to excite hostile impulses or fill the o'er-canopying dust of lower Greenwich Street with the flash of brandished daggers and the sound of exploding revolvers. These things are outside of the needs of either business and cannot in any way contribute to the well-being of these picturesque Biblical exiles.

They came hither as to a refuge, with famine hunting them to the shores they were abandoning, and the piled-up tribal feuds of thousands of years behind them. Having found a place where they were protected and could not only get their daily bread but also lay up a little money, to say nothing of the effulgent prospect that their posterity would sometime exfoliate into American citizenship, becoming heirs of all the ages and straddling proudly ahead in the foremost files of time—having, as we remark, compassed all these good and bounteous things by the mere force of coming here, one would think that they would sit down and rest and be thankful instead of flying at each other's throats every little while, like Connemara bulldogs.

But that does not seem to be the exiled Syrian's way. He is as one oppressed with a burdening knowledge of what a rascal the other Syrian is and to burn with a conscientious and inextinguishable desire to obliterate him. Letting the feud rage for a few days without police interference would no doubt wipe out all the elements on which such conditions feed, but this cannot be recommended as a wholesome expedient. We shall have to worry along with them as we do with other turbulent tribes encamped among us, hoping that in the long run we may make useful and peaceful citizens of them. If they cost more than they come to as the result of this educational and disciplinary attention, it will only be what has sometimes happened before, the immigrant tough quite frequently turning out that way, inspiring a waxing National sentiment that his room is much to be preferred to his company.

From current denials as well as from current revelations we judge that the Panama Canal Commission will presently have a new Chairman; also, that it will in future largely dispense with the good offices of the indefatigable WILLIAM NELSON CROMWELL, who shares with the late MARK HANNA the distinction of having committed the United States to the building of an interoceanic canal at Panama.

To paraphrase a well-known saying of HORACE GREELEY, "we will not say that all the opponents of JEROME are gamblers, cadets, owners or lessees of disorderly places, graft-seeking politicians, and men whose fortune depends on the lax enforcement of the law, but if it were possible to corral these classes not a vote for JEROME could be got in the crowd."

In the intervals of campaign labor Mr. IVINS finds time to announce the purely irrelevant fact that he is a member of the National and of the International Associations for the Promotion of Equal Suffrage, and to transmit to the lady President of the New York County Woman Suffrage Association this solid little chunk of practical wisdom:

We may take it for granted that when a thoroughly respectable majority of women insist on the right to vote, and persist in their insistence, the men will not delay in according it to them. It is natural that the men should not give it to them until they have to, or until they see that it is wise to. They do not want their political plans and operations interfered with. But when they see that the time has come they will not wait for the fortress to be stormed; they will do as they have always done—they will make the best of it, and surrender as gracefully as possible.

The Woman's Army and Navy League.

To the Editor of The New York Times.

In thanking you for your excellent editorial on the "Army Canteen" in THE TIMES of the 22d inst., may I be allowed to correct a slight misapprehension? The Woman's Army and Navy League, though strongly in favor of the re-establishment of the canteen and earnestly working for this devoutly wished-for consummation, was not founded solely for this purpose, but works in other ways for the benefit of the men of both army and navy.

J. H. CHADWICK.

East Hampton, L. I., Oct. 24, 1905.

A Word from Boston.

From The Boston Herald.

The New York papers are generally inclined to indorse Anthony Comstock's protest against the forthcoming production on the stage of what is reckoned the most daring of all the plays of George Bernard Shaw. Their line of reasoning is that what has been officially declared not fit for public presentation in London must be unfit for New York. This is a rather subservient concession to London taste, but it may be warranted. Meanwhile the flippant manager invites Comstock to be on hand on the opening night, and listen to a great moral lesson.

Guileless.

From The Chicago Record-Herald.

"Do you think," she asked, "that there are any girl angels in heaven?"

"I haven't given the matter much thought," he replied, "but I know of one girl angel who isn't there."

"Oh, Tom!" she cried when she could again use her mouth for speaking purposes, "you don't think I said it just to lead you up to it, do you?"

The Real Thing.

"Did you secure your title of 'Colonel' in the army?" asked the formidably frank person.

"Certainly not," replied Col. Stilwall. "It is the expression of genuine esteem by my friends and neighbors; not a mere formality of red tape."

FOR AN ANNUITY BOND.

Suggestion for a Popular Loan for the Panama Canal.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The announcement of a proposed Government bond issue of $130,000,000 for the further financing of the Panama Canal project prompts me to suggest an examination into the feasibility of raising the required funds through a popular loan to be floated by a method not as yet utilized in this country, viz., by the sale of annuity bonds. There are several reasons why the time has arrived when this method is to be recommended. First, there is the difficulty of distributing a Government issue of any magnitude directly among the great body of the people by methods hitherto in vogue, owing chiefly to the small net interest rate realized on the investment as compared with the rates that can be earned on savings bank, building and loan, or trust company deposits, as well as on approved railroad, public service, and industrial bonds, earning twice the income that it is possible to realize from Government bonds.

This results in an absorption of the Government issues by banking syndicates to be later taken over in small lots and at advanced prices by Trustees, National banks, and other financial institutions required by law to invest a portion of their funds at a maximum of safety and a minimum of profit, rather than by the mass of the people, whose natural thrift prompts them to save their surplus earnings with a substantial increment of interest. It follows that a high interest-bearing Government issue would meet with a demand among that portion of the public which is more desirous of enjoying a large guaranteed life income than of earning a smaller interest rate in order to leave the principal behind them for the continued enjoyment or support of others. Only one way has been discovered as yet for safely guaranteeing and profitably continuing the payment for a term of years or for life of a percentage on an amount loaned materially larger than the current interest rate, and that is by sinking the principal sum with a responsible financial institution in the purchase of an annuity.

It is hardly necessary to call attention to the fact that life annuities are especially desirable purchases only for persons past the prime of life, inasmuch as it is only at ages above 50 that annuities in excess of 7 per cent. can be purchased, the rate being about 9 per cent. when purchased at the age of 60 and about 13 per cent. when purchased at the age of 70. They therefore appeal especially to that class of people who have small fortunes accumulated from a lifetime's savings and who desire to get the greatest possible use and comfort therefrom in their old age, avoiding the one extreme of leaving their entire fortune to others, eking out an existence from the mere income in the meantime, and the other extreme of drawing on their principal and perhaps using it up entirely before their death.

Many people who hesitate to purchase annuities from insurance companies or other private corporations would be glad to avail themselves of the greater security which a Government annuity bond would have in their estimation as compared with the former class. Aside from the question of added security, whether real or fancied, the factor of economy is equally important so far as affecting the popularization of annuities in this country is concerned, and the highest security is not inconsistent with lower cost; that is to say, with net cost. The greater life insurance companies, after many decades of varying experience and varying rates, have at last settled upon uniform rates graded according to age from 4¾ per cent. per annum at age 18 to 21 per cent. per annum at age 85 in the case of male lives, and from 4½ per cent. at age 18 to 20 per cent. at age 85 in the case of female lives, the age of purchase governing as to the percentage, which, of course, remains constant till death in the case of a life annuity.

None of the companies, (not even the so-called mutual organizations conducted on the "participating" plan,) so far as the writer is informed, sell annuities at net cost to the annuitant or return to him anything in the shape of a dividend or increase above the guaranteed amount. Their rates are the result both of mathematical calculation and of experience as recorded by statistics, and, since this business is presumably carried on at a profit to some class, it will be readily appreciated that the Government should be able to guarantee the same rates as those guaranteed by the annuity writing companies, the customary rate of interest which the Government now guarantees on its regular bond issues practically equaling the low rate which the companies assume they will earn when calculating their annuity guarantees on the present basis. Furthermore, as the principal object of a Government annuity bond issue would be the raising of a large sum of money for a specific immediate use rather than for a continued source of profit at the expense of a particular class it should be "written in the bond" that the purchaser is to receive in addition to the guaranteed annuity a cash dividend, if earned; that is to say, an amount which, after a certain period of surplus accumulation, it is found from year to year can be credited back, owing to saving through economical administration and to any increase in the mortality rate beyond that called for by the expectancy tables.

The method herein outlined would call for an actual repayment of the bonded debt and a much quicker repayment than under the present system, under which a small interest rate is paid throughout a long term, leaving the entire sum still due, to be paid off either on the endless-chain principle of making a new loan to take up the whole or a substantial portion of the old one, or by the heroic alternative of raising the entire sum by taxation, which is just what a bond issue is invoked to avoid. Public debts, like private ones, should be gradually and continuously paid off and not left to accumulate and to attain immortality.

Much may be said for and against the annuity bond plan, whether applied to the next proposed Government loan or to subsequent ones. It would be inadvisable if not impossible, in a brief outline sketch like this to enter into a discussion of technical details of the plan, but something will have been gained if this letter prompts intelligent public discussion of a subject which should be further studied by our public stewards.

Knowledge of Campaign Contributions Desired Before Election.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Kindly publish this in the next issue of your esteemed paper. I write this at the request of a number of voters. We are agreed that the overshadowing issue of this campaign is graft. We are agreed to cast our votes for the party and candidates least to be suspected of graft. Therefore we ask the Republican, Democratic, Municipal, and Socialist Parties or candidates to publish each a list of the campaign contributions. It will be a most eloquent campaign argument.

In view of the striking corroboration of Mr. Parker's charges; in view of the revelations before the insurance committee, we appeal to Mr. McClellan, Mr. Ivins, Mr. Hearst, Mr. Lee—

PLEDGE OF A CANDIDATE.

Mr. Bauchle Will Work for Better City Bookkeeping.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In common with every citizen whose business takes him to the city's departments, I have found great difficulty in obtaining accurate data from the city's books. It is an unfortunate fact that the system of bookkeeping, or rather lack of system, which is now employed, makes very much more for obscurity than for accuracy. Now, as a candidate for the Board of Aldermen from the Twenty-first Aldermanic District, it seems to me to be in my power to make a pledge which may be of some value to the taxpayers of this city. If elected to the Board of Aldermen I shall immediately move for the creation of a commission of experts which shall investigate the methods of bookkeeping employed in all of the city's departments to the effect of recommending one uniform and practicable system to supplant those now in use.

The advantage which would accrue to the public from a uniform system of bookkeeping seems to me to be obvious. Many very important municipal questions are unintelligible to the average voter to-day, because of the fact that information regarding them is almost impossible to obtain except after the most laborious and extensive search. It seems to me that this issue is one of importance to the city and to all taxpayers, and that the substitution of modern and simple bookkeeping methods for those which are now in use would materially reduce our tax bills. GEORGE YOUNG BAUCHLE.

Drawbacks of Wooden Pavements.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

One going about the streets cannot fail to be impressed with the large amount of wood block pavements now being laid. This form of pavement has so many merits that I fear its demerits have been lost sight of. It seems to me that, before committing the city to much more of this kind of pavement, a careful study should be made, not of the theoretical merits of the pavement, but of its practical advantages and disadvantages. The attempt to use it for a cure-all for all pavement ills is bound to cause a reaction against it in the public mind. It is not of universal application.

Take, for instance, the pavements in Cortlandt Street and Liberty Street, between Greenwich and Church. On a wet day the pavement affords absolutely no foothold for horses, and it is cruel to see heartless drivers beat their horses in an endeavor to compel them to do the impossible. An occasional application of sand or fine gravel on those portions of the street with a heavy grade would undoubtedly somewhat relieve the present deplorable condition, but if not, then, notwithstanding the many excellent points of advantage of the wood block pavement, its use, except on comparatively level grades, should be abandoned. A Practical Religion.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I was pleased to read Mr. Felix Adler's address published in THE TIMES last Monday. It is the kind of religion that our people need and the kind that many wish for but seldom hear preached. It is suited to a large class of conscientious, earnest people who may be called Veritists—Disciples of Truth. Their principles are embodied mainly in the following practical, ethical, and moral rules of conduct:

Practical religion is the all-essential.

Education must cure human ills and promote mankind.

Duty precedes pleasure; cleanliness precedes virtue.

Economy is the first step to material success.

Independence is a jewel; self-control is greatness.

A place for everything and everything in its place.

A time for everything and everything in its time.

Lawfully provide a self-subsistence—first law of Nature.

Stand by Truth, live by Justice, and conform to Propriety.

Do unto others as you would have them do unto you. VERITIST.

Where Words Fail.

From The New Orleans Times-Democrat.

"What is the color 'chatain'?" a certain young man asked of a venerable Creole lady, whose hair was white as snow.

She rummaged through her mind for terms of explanation, being a little liable to forget English words at times.

Finally, however, she replied:

"'Chatain,' dat is the color of my hair, you understand, when I was young!"

And then she smiled with satisfaction at the exact manner in which she had explained the term, while the questioner still wondered what color "chatain" was.

BIG CRUISERS RACING TO PLEASE PRESIDENT

The West Virginia Joined by the Colorado and Pennsylvania.

CAPITAL GETS AEROGRAMS

Messages from President's Cruiser Travel 1,100 Miles—Savannah Trying to Get in Touch.

By Wireless Telegraph.

CRUISER WEST VIRGINIA, at Sea, via Savannah, Ga., Oct. 28.—The weather is perfect, a moderate breeze blowing from the northeast and the sea smooth. The President is quartered in the Admiral's cabin and is enjoying the trip immensely.

The ship is keeping up a uniform speed of 18 knots and everything is running smoothly. This is the first time in the history of the navy when a squadron cruised in company at a speed of 18 knots and over. At 1:45 P. M. to-day we picked up the Pennsylvania and the Colorado off Key West and are now cruising in squadron.

As we passed, the two ships each manned the rail and saluted the President's flag. It is the customary honor and the President returned the salute from the Admiral's bridge. To-night the President will dine with the wardroom officers, and, according to the navy custom while at sea on Saturday night, will join in the toast "Sweethearts and wives."

KEY WEST, Fla., Oct. 28.—The cruiser West Virginia, with President Roosevelt aboard, arrived off Key West at 1 o'clock to-day.

She was immediately joined by the cruisers Colorado and Pennsylvania, and a start was made for Hampton Roads. The trip will be made in fast time.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—The Washington Navy Yard to-night was in touch with the West Virginia by wireless telegraph. Operator P. S. Geagan, who is in charge of the plant here, received the following message:

"West Virginia in good communication with Jupiter Inlet. Savannah and St. Augustine have heard no messages, but West Virginia requests Savannah to listen closely for them, as they may have messages any time. West Virginia also requests weather report from Savannah."

ON BOARD THE CRUISER WEST VIRGINIA, Oct. 27, via Key West, Fla., Oct. 28.—At 9:30 A. M. Friday President Roosevelt, accompanied by Surgeon General Rixey of the Navy and Secretary Loeb, came on board the United States ship West Virginia from the lighthouse tender Ivy. He was received at the gangway by Admiral Brownson, Capt. Arnold, and the Admiral's personal staff. All the officers were assembled on the quarter deck in special full-dress uniform, the crew manned the rail, and the marine guard and band were paraded.

When the President ascended the quarterdeck officers and men saluted, the marine guard presented arms, the drums and bugles gave four ruffles and flourishes, the band played "The Star-Spangled Banner," the Admiral's flag was hauled down and the President's flag broken at the main, and a National salute of twenty-one guns was fired.

The West Virginia immediately got under way for Chesapeake Bay. Off Key West she was to be joined by the Pennsylvania and Colorado, the other two vessels of the squadron. The speed to be maintained is 18 knots, and it will be the first time in the history of this country that any squadron has cruised at such a speed for a long distance.

At 3 P. M. the crew was mustered at quarters, and the President, accompanied by the Admiral, inspected the ship. The West Virginia is in excellent condition, and the President was particularly pleased with the cleanliness and neatness of her crew. The President is in excellent health and having a smooth and pleasant trip.

WASHINGTON GOT AEROGRAMS.

Wireless Station Caught Messages from Cruiser 1,100 Miles Away.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—The wireless telegraph station at the Washington Navy Yard was in communication with the armored cruiser West Virginia, on which President Roosevelt is a passenger, from 2:07 until 5:15 o'clock this morning, over a distance of 1,100 miles.

The Navy Department late to-day received from the operator of the wireless telegraph station at the navy yard an account of the conditions under which the station was in communication with the cruiser. Because of the novelty and importance from a naval point of view of the test, the report was received with intense interest by the officials.

At 2:17 A. M. the West Virginia was heard asking the wireless station at Dry Tortugas if it had received her message.

At 2:23 the West Virginia again spoke to Dry Tortugas, saying: "Have 600 words press [newspaper dispatches] as soon as I can get you stronger."

At 2:56 Key West replied: "O. K."

At 2:57 the West Virginia was heard saying to Dry Tortugas: "My antennae broke down. Did you get those messages?"

At 3:54 the Washington station heard the same message going to Key West.

At 3:59 a reply going to the West Virginia was picked up to this effect: "Yes, we heard you; both two and three."

At 4:02 the West Virginia sent "Good night" to the Colorado at Key West, but at 4:08 the West Virginia was heard making another effort to get Dry Tortugas, repeating: "Six hundred words, press," "Six hundred words, press."

In the opinion of the operators here, the main trouble experienced by the West Virginia in getting in touch with the wireless stations on the Gulf Coast lay in the fact that the operator was sending too strongly, which, perhaps, accounts for the fact that the messages were attuned in strength to the instruments in the Washington Station.

As soon as the noise of the machinery and engines at the yard began this morning, it became impossible for the wireless station to communicate further with the cruiser.

The feat of getting such messages about 1,100 miles, mostly overland, is regarded as remarkable.

MRS. ROOSEVELT'S MESSAGE.

Congratulations on Birthday the First Sent to the President.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—As soon as the West Virginia got in touch with the wireless station at Key West to-day the first message to be transmitted from the shore to the big cruiser was a personal one from Mrs. Roosevelt to the President congratulating him on his forty-seventh birthday.

This message was sent last night from the Navy Department to Key West with instructions to deliver it to the President at the first opportunity.

HERRICK SENDS A WIRELESS.

Attempt Made at Cleveland to Reach the West Virginia.

CLEVELAND, Oct. 28.—An attempt to send a wireless message from this city to the cruiser West Virginia was made today. It was from Gov. Herrick to President Roosevelt. It read:

"On behalf of the people of Ohio I send you greetings and sincerest congratulations on your escape from injury in steamship accident and hope for your safe return. This is by American De Forest Wireless Telegraph."

Royal Mail Adopts De Forest Wireless.

Arrangements were completed yesterday for the installation of the De Forest wireless telegraph system on the Royal Mail Steam Packet Company's steamships Tagus, Atrato, La Plata, Trent, and Orinoco, plying between New York and Southampton, via Panama, and the Southern Pacific Company's Prince Arthur, plying between New Orleans and Havana.

JERSEY CITY OFFICIAL SPAT.

Corporation Counsel and Chief Murphy Clash Over a Policeman.

Chief of Police Murphy and George L. Record, Corporation Counsel of Jersey City, had an exciting interview yesterday. Charges had been made to the Chief that Policeman Francis Monahan, who was born in Ireland, had never been naturalized, and was therefore illegally a member of the force. Monahan was appointed in 1887.

Hunting up Monahan's application, the Chief found that he had made affidavit that he was naturalized in Hudson County in 1884. The Chief went to the Court House, but found no record of Monahan having been naturalized. Then he sent for Monahan. The policeman said that if he had made such a statement in his preliminary application he had made a mistake, as he was naturalized in New York.

"Very well," said the Chief, "go and get your papers."

Monahan left, but soon returned with Mr. Record, who questioned the Chief's right to inquire into Monahan's naturalization.

"Your presence here, Mr. Record," said the Chief, "carries no weight. I am Chief of Police and this man is a patrolman. He is under my orders."

"Let me see his preliminary application," said Mr. Record.

"I don't think I will," replied the Chief. "What right have you to see this paper?"

The Chief said further that he would tolerate no outside interference. Matters cooled down a bit then, and the Chief showed Mr. Record the papers.

After glancing over the paper Mr. Record left. Two hours later Monahan returned with his naturalization papers. The matter will now be referred to the Police Board.

The incident attracted much attention owing to a report that in the event of Mayor Fagan's re-election Patrolman Monahan is to be made a Police Commissioner.

CITY LIGHT PLANT READY.

Mayor McClellan Will Turn on the Current To-morrow Afternoon.

Bridge Commissioner Best announced yesterday that all is ready for the opening of the city's lighting plant under the Williamsburg Bridge on Monday afternoon. Mayor McClellan will turn the switch which will light up the bridge and the plaza at the Brooklyn end of the structure.

The new plant will furnish power for the electric pumps in use at the stations on either end of the bridge. It will include four generators.

The cost of the plant, which will burn refuse from the streets, was approximately $80,000, and the saving to the city by its operation is estimated at about $12,000 a year. The ceremony of opening the plant is set for 4 o'clock on Monday.

BEN GREET'S "HENRY V."

His Company Opens Its Season at Poughkeepsie.

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Oct. 28.—Vassar students formed the greater part of the audience which witnessed here to-day the first performance in this country of "Henry V." by the Ben Greet company. The theatre was crowded and there was much enthusiasm.

Mr. Greet's production, without the elaboration of heavy sets of scenery, allows time for an employment of all of the text, and the occasion was therefore of unusual interest to students at the university. Immediately after the performance the company left here for New York, where it will open the regular season at Mendelssohn Hall on Monday night.

SPECULATOR WEPT.

Tried to Sell Mr. Fiske's Manager a Ticket and Got Arrested.

A ticket speculator named Arenstaff strayed around to the front door of the Manhattan Theatre yesterday afternoon. He had a bundle of tickets and tried to sell one to G. C. Smith, Harrison G. Fiske's business manager. Mr. Fiske sent to the Tenderloin Station for a detective, and Arenstaff was arrested. The speculator wept as he fingered the tickets in his pockets and figured up his losses.

EAST SIDE SHAKESPEARE.

Seats in Demand for Educational Alliance Performances.

The authorities of the Educational Alliance and the various Settlements united in the Ben Greet Shakespearean performances on the east side report a favorable demand for seats. All the Settlements have exhausted their stock of the twenty-five-cent seats, but the fifty-cent and the dollar seats must be sold in order to insure the financial success of the undertaking. It is hoped that all who are interested will support the project by purchasing seats which will insure them not only a first-class performance, but also give them the unique opportunity of witnessing the presentation of Shakespearean plays in a section of the city which thus far has not yet witnessed performances of them in the original tongue.

Seats may be reserved by letter to the Educational Alliance or by telephoning to 1,970 Orchard. The box office is open every evening, except Friday, from 8 to 10.

MENDELSSOHN HALL CHANGES

Auditorium Redecorated in Harmony with Its Murals.

Mendelssohn Hall, which was built fifteen years ago by Alfred Corning Clark, has recently been redecorated and renovated by the Clark estate. Especial pains have been taken with the auditorium, which has always been regarded as one of the handsomest halls in the city. The walls, pillars, proscenium arch, seats, and hangings have been done in a restful shade of green in harmony with two fine mural paintings.

The paintings are by the late Robert Blum and are declared by President Diehlman to be the finest specimens of mural art in America. In all the redecorations the plans outlined by the artist have been carefully followed.

New Park Theatre Open Nov. 4.

The reconstructed Park Theatre in Brooklyn, which will hereafter be known as The Shubert-Park, will be opened to the public Saturday evening, Nov. 4, with Bertha Galland in David Belasco's comedy, "Sweet Kitty Bellairs." The theatre has been made into an up-to-date playhouse. The decorations are in gold and ivory. The box office will open at noon to-morrow.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Channing Pollock's new play, "The Little Grey Lady," which is to be produced by Maurice Campbell, will have its first presentation at Hartford on Nov. 20. The principals are Julia Dean, William Humphries, Dorothy Donnelly, Alice Leigh, and Edgar Selwyn.

J. M. Barrie has postponed his visit to this country until December. When he arrives Maude Adams will be playing "Peter Pan" at the Empire, and Ethel Barrymore will be appearing in "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire," both plays from Mr. Barrie's pen.

"The Female Drummers," with Manchester's Vanity Fair Extravaganza Company, are at the Circle this week. Vaudeville is introduced in the bill.

The King and Queen of England attended William Collier's performance of "On the Quiet" at the Comedy Theatre, London, last week.

Stuart Jackson's Bachelor Dinner.

Stuart Wells Jackson, whose marriage to Miss Elizabeth Underwood Cox, daughter of Mrs. Thomas C. Cox of Washington, D. C., takes place on Nov. 4, gave his bachelor dinner last night at Delmonico's. The guests were his brother, R. Heber Jackson, Lyman B. Sturgis, Stephen Van Rensselaer, Paul A. McQuaid, David F. Rogers, Frederic Kernochan, Franklin A. Lord, and Robert J. Turnbull.

BANK STOCKHOLDERS ASSESSED 100 PER CENT.

"Bull" Andrews Sued for $52,000 on Enterprise Notes.

CONTROLLER RIDGELY ACTS

Says Dead Cashier Clark Embezzled Large Amount, and Probably Had Accomplices.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—Though the work of investigating the wreck of the Enterprise Bank of Allegheny, Penn., has only begun, enough has been discovered to show that the most sensational statements have been justified.

Controller Ridgely to-day issued a statement from which it appears that the failure is so bad that an assessment of 100 per cent. has been levied against the stockholders; that, despite "Bull" Andrews's denial, he is liable for $52,000 worth of notes, and that suit has been brought against him for that amount; that the dead cashier, Clark, was an embezzler to a large extent, and probably had accomplices among the other officials or employes, and that this is only the beginning of the revelations to come.

Andrews's relations with the Pennsylvania Republican machine are what make this especially interesting at this time. When the late Senator Quay fought so hard to jam Statehood for New Mexico down the throat of the United States Senate it was open gossip that Quay was working not only for the creation of a State from which his old Pennsylvania henchman Andrews could come as a Senator, but for the benefit of the commercial enterprises in which Andrews and other Pennsylvanians were interested in New Mexico, and which enterprises are reputed to have been connected with the wrecked bank.

Now Andrews has become a Delegate in Congress, and is reputed to have the inside track for Senator if the bill can be put through. He is close to Gov. Otero, and brought that official on with him when he hurried East to see if he could avert the Enterprise Bank explosion. On that occasion persons who did not know why Andrews was in the East supposed he had come to the rescue of his old friends in the Republican machine. THE TIMES's correspondent asked him if such were his purpose and Andrews, who was on his way to take the train to Pittsburg, replied: "No, I am not here for politics, but on private business. But my sympathies are with the regular Republican organization, as they always have been, and I hope it will win."

Then he went to Pittsburg, but too late. He arrived just as the frantic and despairing cashier reached the end of his rope and blew his brains out. There was nothing left for Andrews except to deny loudly that he had had any financial connection with the bank, which he did.

Now the receiver has begun suit against the one-time henchman of the Quay machine, now New Mexico's chosen spokesman in Congress and prospective Senator, for $52,000 due on notes, which, on the heels of Clark's suicide, he denied having made. It is believed that when the full report which Mr. Ridgely says may not be ready for weeks is made, it may turn out that others besides Andrews are involved, and that there will be a new meaning to his statement: "My sympathies are with the regular Republican organization, as they always have been."

Controller Ridgely's statement in part is as follows:

"The labor of making a thorough examination and report will be so very great, owing particularly to the suicide of the cashier of the bank and the consequent difficulty of ascertaining the condition of affairs that it will be several days yet, possibly weeks, before an accurate and exact report of the condition of the bank can be sent to the Controller.

"Letters and messages from Receiver Cunningham, however, justify the Controller in making the statement that the failure will be a very bad one, and will justify the assessment of 100 per cent. on the stockholders against their liabilities, and this has been made to-day.

"The Controller's office has also been advised that Receiver Cunningham has to-day brought suit against W. H. Andrews for $52,000 on notes signed or indorsed by him. A most vigorous effort will be made to collect this money as well as all other amounts due to the insolvent bank.

"Judge Oldham reports to the Controller that Cashier T. Lee Clark seems to have abstracted collateral held in the bank and other securities belonging to it, and his shortage will be a very bad one. He seems to have falsified his books and to have deceived the President of the bank as well as the Directors, who appear to have made at least some effort to examine into the affairs of the bank and to check up Mr. Clark's statements.

"Sufficient evidence has not yet been found to justify charges against any one in the bank besides the cashier, but it seems difficult to believe that such affairs could have existed without at least some knowledge of it on the part of the other employes of the bank."

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Oct. 28.—National Bank Examiner John B. Cunningham, who is receiver of the Enterprise Bank, entered suit this afternoon against W. H. Andrews, Territorial Delegate from New Mexico, for over $50,000, charging him with fraudulently conspiring with F. R. Nicholls, his private secretary, and T. Lee Clark, the dead cashier of the Enterprise National Bank, to unlawfully procure funds by the proceeds of negotiable paper.

It was learned to-day that Clark left a notation in his desk, which is in the hands of Receiver Cunningham. The note calls attention to securities given by Clark to W. H. Andrews to be hypothecated. There is nothing in the bank to show that Andrews received the securities.

Mr. Andrews's secretary, F. R. Nicholls, said Mr. Andrews had left the city, and he did not know where he had gone nor when he would return. It has since been learned that Mr. Andrews is preparing to leave for Europe after he turns over his interests in the New Mexican enterprises to H. R. Boggs of Boggs & Buhl, Allegheny.

There are at least $600,000 of securities missing from the Enterprise Bank. It has been discovered that about $100,000 in stock was hypothecated by Cashier Clark. Judge Oldham says that there was nothing in the bank on which criminal prosecutions could be based on any note left by Clark.

Arthur Kennedy, also a member of the Pennsylvania Development Company, has left the city. He was to have been subpoenaed by the Coroner to attend the inquest on Clark's death next Monday. Francis J. Torrance, who had been subpoenaed, filed a certificate from Dr. C. B. King that he was too ill to attend the inquest. Receiver Cunningham will attend the inquest, but will not make public any facts relating to the bank.

A WALL PAINTING FOR IOWA.

Blashfield's Forty-Foot Interpretation of "Westward the Course of Empire."

The north wall of the Vanderbilt Gallery in the American Fine Arts, 125 West Fifty-seventh Street, is none too large for the canvas required to decorate one end of the main story of the Capitol of Iowa at Des Moines. Fourteen feet high and forty feet long, it presents a moving scene and a scene of moving, since it is a visible interpretation of the line, "Westward the course of empire takes its way." The painter is Mr. E. D. Blashfield, whose mural works for Baltimore and St. Paul have been exhibited from time to time in the same gallery prior to their removal to the places for which they are destined.

The Iowa State Capitol is a long building with central dome, the lunettes within which are to be decorated by Mr. Kenyon Cox. At one end of the main floor a double stairway rises to the floor on the right and left, leaving a balustrade in front of the stair well. Beyond this balustrade, and on a level with the floor, is a wall space where Mr. Blashfield's great canvas will be fastened. On the higher wall are vaulted niches like an arcade, which will be filled by mosaics after paintings from Mr. Dielman, President of the National Academy. The big decoration is therefore to be seen on a level with the beholder, but at a considerable distance, beyond certain columns, as well as the balustrade and stair well mentioned.

The artist's name for his composition is simply "Westward," leaving the rest of Bishop Berkeley's famous line to the imagination. Led by a group of floating female geniuses in ample draperies, whose diaphanous, delicately colored robes almost graze the backs of four laboring oxen, the prairie schooner lumbers along with its canvas roof, white and yellow in spots from the level shafts of the sun. On the front seat is a young woman of notable comeliness, Blashfield's type of the American girl, and a much younger sister. By the side of the Conestoga wagon marches another young woman in white, holding two big dogs in leash and a little boy by the hand. After her come three men of different ages, abreast, the youngest of whom turns to address a group of farmers who stand in growing maize and represent immigrants already settled. They watch the passing company and seem to be exchanging greetings. Between the youth who continues westward, and a young girl among the onlookers who wears a man's hat there is evidently an interchange of looks, suggesting that some day the youth may return on the trail and persuade her to venture with him further on the course of empire. Other figures are less visible near the oxen and beyond the wagon. Just to the rear, and in the air, float two more of the draped female spirits, like a rear guard of supernatural benefactors.

These two groups of wingless graces have such swinging robes and mantles so lifted by some breeze not of earthly origin, that they seem to be buoyed up like creatures of the mist and cloud who defy the ordinary laws of nature. They have sweet faces and their draperies are in lovely tones of pale yellow, pale green, and amethyst. Yet one carries a broad, open book to signify education, another the shield of the State, two more the seeds that are to be sown by the travelers when they have reached their goal. The season is midsummer, verging on Autumn; the hour is sunset and the figures form a frieze against a greenish sky. The light from the west falls on the faces and figures of angels, men and women, oxen and dogs, giving a peculiar glow of colors, faintly russet, or pink, or lilac, to everything it touches, colors that are meant to produce a pattern of decorative tints which will catch and please the eye from afar, before one has approached near enough to distinguish the meaning of the procession.

The interior which this charming combination of lines and color spots will decorate is built of a creamy local stone. There will be no advanced frame round the picture, but it will be separated from the stonework of the wall by a broad band of gold laid flat against the surface. At the Vanderbilt Gallery this border of gold has not been supplied or even indicated, though the decoration would be a gainer. Mr. Blashfield was at work on the canvas up to yesterday, and since it will not be necessary to move the picture at once, perhaps he will have leisure now to run a flat band of gilt cloth round it as a substitute for the "mat" in which it will appear at Des Moines.

A notable point in the composition is the absence of large masses in the extreme left and right, such as painters like to have in order to concentrate the interest toward the centre. This makes it less a picture, more a frieze, and suggests that one is looking at a section of a procession, the leading oxen that help to pull the wagon being out of sight on the left, and other figures having not yet come into the picture on the right. It aids the sense of progression, which is what the painter desired.

LOWER DUTY ON SAKI.

Appraisers Decide That Japan's National Drink Is Not a Still Wine.

The efforts of the United States Government to impose a high duty on saki, the national beverage of Japan, failed yesterday when the Board of General Appraisers handed down a decision in the protest case of Komada & Co. of San Francisco, in which it is held that saki is not dutiable by similitude to still wine at the rate of 50 cents per gallon. The Dingley tariff law contains no mention of saki, and this omission is responsible for litigation which now involves over $750,000 in duties alleged by the importers to have been collected illegally.

The board in its decision holds that saki comes within the tariff provision for non-enumerated manufactured articles with duty at 20 per cent. ad valorem. This ruling is in harmony with the findings of the Federal Circuit Court and the Court of Appeals in a previous test case, and it is believed in local Treasury circles that Attorney General Moody will advise the Secretary of the Treasury that no further proceedings need be had. In that event the Government must refund large sums to the importers at New York and on the Pacific Coast, as well as the Hawaiian Islands.

Should an appeal be made to the courts the litigation will continue for two years or more. In the meantime the Government will insist upon importers paying the high duties.

NEW BATTALION FIRE CHIEFS.

Captains Thomas King and Michael Martin Promoted.

Fire Commissioner Hayes yesterday announced the appointment of two new Battalion Chiefs for the Fire Department. The men promoted are Thomas King, former Foreman of Engine Company No. 39, and Michael Martin, Captain of Hook and Ladder Company No. 13.

King was appointed to the department in 1881, and has frequently been promoted for bravery. He has fourteen children.

Martin became a member of the department in 1873, and like King, has had his name enrolled on the merit list many times. The appointments, which carry a salary of $3,300 each, go into effect on Nov. 1.

COL. BEEBE, HIS IDEA, AND HOW HE COINED IT

Went Out to Fight Strikers; Thought of a Great Scheme.

THEN HE WAITED TWO YEARS

Now Guyandot Valley Operators Have to Go to Him to Get Their Coal Hauled.

Special to The New York Times.

HUNTINGTON, West Va., Oct. 28.—Col. J. C. Beebe has struck it rich. Col. Beebe reluctantly left the lights of Broadway, New York, about two years ago because fortune did not favor him. Now he can go back to Broadway and hold his own with any of his friends. Col. Beebe found an idea out in the Guyandot Valley, and it was as good a discovery as a gold mine.

He came just to help put down the coal strike two years ago, and he did his duty unflinchingly, standing guard with a long gun some days when strikers threatened to stop loading of certain cars that had to take coal to market. Between whiles he observed things in the valley.

He noted that the only outlet for the big coal mines thereabout was a branch line of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad, and that sometimes the officials of the big system seemed to let it slip their memories.

"Some of these days," thought Col. Beebe, "that road won't have cars enough to haul all the coal out of here. Something ought to be done."

Thereupon Col. Beebe formed a corporation. There was not much behind it except the idea. But the idea was to make a private car line, and the Chesapeake and Ohio officials were so impressed by it that they gave Col. Beebe a contract running ten years, obligating themselves to haul cars that Col. Beebe's company might provide at a very low rate.

Col. Beebe presented his contract to the coal mine owners, but none showed any financial interest in it. Col. Beebe put it away and went on working and waiting.

Suddenly this Fall there was a shortage of cars in the Guyandot Valley. Most of the available rolling stock of the branch line was taken elsewhere. Coal piled up and could not be moved, until one company got 65,000 tons behind its orders and many mines were working only five days a month.

Then the operators went hunting for Col. Beebe. A. F. Holden of Cleveland, W. H. Coolidge of Boston, and others told him he could have all the money he needed to carry out his contract. Col. Beebe is now so busy planning the construction of a great coal harbor here, and an elevator near Cincinnati, and a lot of cars and barges that he will not be able to see Broadway for a while. But when he does he will be well provided.

The residuary estate is to be distributed among Miss Cram's two sisters, Henrietta Haven and Lily C. Cram, her niece Charlotte A. W. Cram, and her brother, J. Sergeant Cram. IN AID OF LITTLE CRIPPLES.

Bazaar of Nations Will Be Held at the Waldorf Nov. 6.

After weeks of hard work by the philanthropic men and women interested in the New York Home for Destitute and Crippled Children, preparations have been completed for the "Bazaar of Nations," which is to be held in the Waldorf-Astoria the afternoon and evening of Nov. 6 in aid of the institution. Features of the bazaar will be a Japanese tea garden, where Miss Inez Le Fevre will preside over a group of geisha girls, and a vaudeville entertainment will be managed by Sol Bloom.

Although Mrs. Jacob Litt will not be able to attend the bazaar, the work she has done in perfecting the doll booth will be apparent. She has sent to the managers one wonderful doll, ironically called "Miss Flora McFlimsey," but this young lady is far from being like her namesake. She has everything that the heart of a doll could desire, including a sealskin coat, automobile togs, even to the goggles, and her costume will be changed hourly to show the extent of her wardrobe.

A prominent feature will be the Inniscarra booth, in charge of Mrs. Chauncey Olcott and Mrs. Augustus Pitou. Mrs. Olcott will wear an Irish lace collar that cost $3,000, and took two years to make, and there will be on sale fine examples of Irish laces, Achill Island pearl jewelry, Balleek ware, blackthorns, and Gaelic Christmas cards.

Mrs. A. L. Erlanger is the President of the organization that has done so much for unfortunate little ones, and many of the best-known women in New York have assisted her. The home makes few appeals to the public, and it is hoped that the response this year through the bazaar will be even more generous than before.

GEN. DRAGOMIROFF DEAD.

Russian Hero Won Fame in the War with Turkey.

KONOTOP, Russia, Oct. 28.—Gen. Dragomiroff, formerly Governor General of Kieff, a member of the Council of State, and a hero of the Turkish war, died on his estate here last night.

Gen. Dragomiroff was regarded as one of the ablest leaders in the Russian Army, and it was frequently rumored that he was about to lead the forces against Japan in place of Kuropatkin. He remained at home, however, as one of the Czar's chief military advisers.

He first came to public notice through his bravery during the Russo-Turkish war. At Shipka Pass, when his forces were being fiercely resisted by the enemy and fell back somewhat, he dismounted and walked slowly up and down a ridge on the firing line a hundred yards in advance of his troops. A storm of bullets whistled about him, but he was not hit. At length he called to his men:

"What are you doing, you geese? Did you think there was danger here? I don't find any."

The Russian troops rallied and forced the Turks to retreat.

On another occasion he stood up to his waist in the icy waters of the Danube for an hour and directed his men against the Turks, although exposed to the fire of sharpshooters. For this achievement the Czar greeted him as "brother" in front of the army and embraced him.

Dragomiroff, as Governor General of Kieff, repressed the labor riots there two years ago by the use of artillery. Hundreds of lives were lost, and the Czar peremptorily dismissed the General.

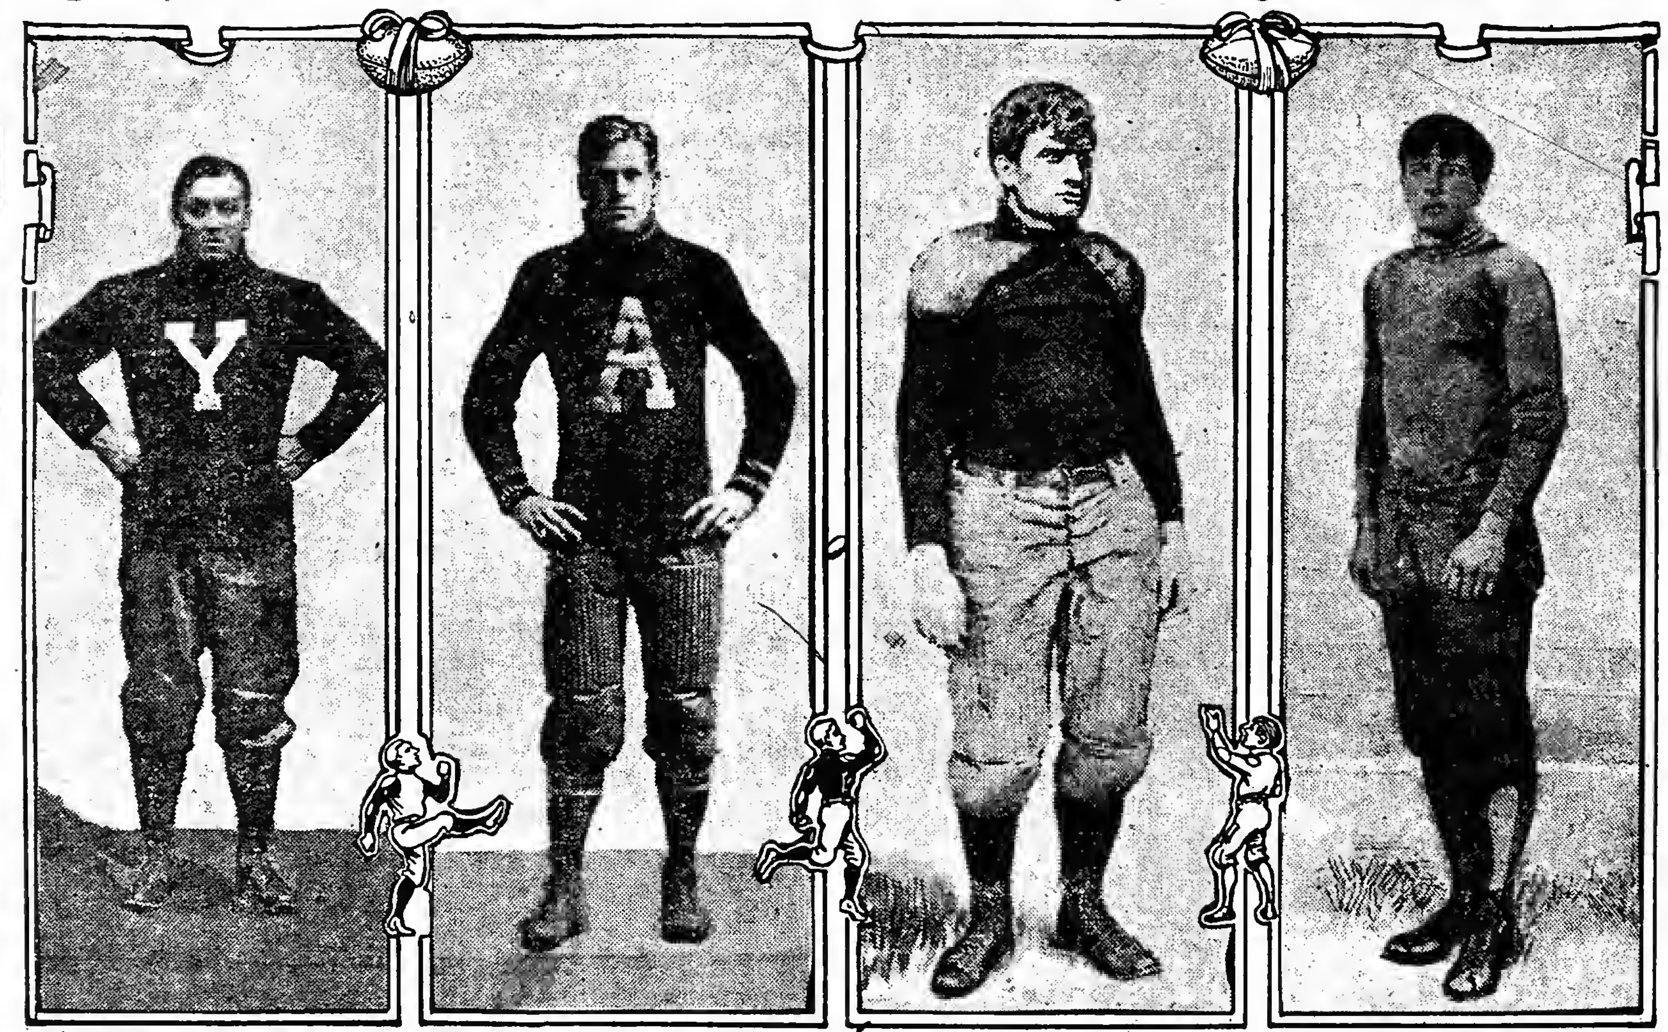
Captains of Teams That Figured In Yesterday's Big Football Games.



SHEVLIN-Yale GILLESPIE-West Point COONEY-Princeton FISHER-Columbia

PRINCETON TRIUMPHS OVER COLUMBIA'S TEAM

Orange and Black Score Twelve Points in the Second Half.

TEN THOUSAND SEE GAME

Firm Stand of Morningside Eleven In First Half Surprises Crowd—McCormick's Two Touchdowns.

Columbia's husky eleven did itself proud in the first big game of the year at American League Park yesterday afternoon, when it played the vaunted Princeton Tigers to a standstill in the first half and held them down to 12 points in the second of what it was feared would be a Columbia Waterloo. The Morningside Collegians showed the best form they have displayed in the season and did mighty creditable work in the opening period, but the Tiger found itself as the half was ending, and from then on the result was never in doubt. Columbia carried the ball to the 22-yard line in the first series of attacks on Nassau's line, and brought it back to the 15-yard line ten minutes later. But there they shot their bolt. Princeton failed by three inches to make a first down, after taking the pigskin to the Columbia 18-yard line before the half closed, and the period ended with Columbia in possession of the leather on her 40-yard line.

There was nothing to the second half but Princeton. The Tigers took the ball immediately following the kick-off from midfield to the Columbia three-yard line, where they were held by the narrowest margin for downs. A kick out of danger only staved off the score for three minutes, for the line attack brought the ball right back to the same spot and over the goal line. Cooney kicked the goal, and his men returned to the attack. Opening up the play and assaulting Columbia's ends, four successive gains of 15 yards each brought the leather again on the Columbia line, and the Blue and White forwards, worn by their hard struggle and giving way one by one to substitutes, were forced back for another score. Again the imperturbable Cooney sent the oval between the posts, and the referee's whistle sounded three minutes later with no further score being made.

New York has few opportunities to see big games since the removal of the big championship contests to college grounds, and it makes the most of its few opportunities. Yesterday was no exception. The day, though a trifle too warm to bring out the best football, was ideally suited to the state of the crowd that want to see the widely heralded heavy scoring Princeton eleven at its best. The vanguard made its way up the hill to the American League Park from the Subway station as early as 1 o'clock. The stands filled slowly, and were not taxed to their utmost capacity, though the spectators continued to file into the inclosure until the referee's whistle actually sounded for play. There were easily 10,000 in the seats when the game was started, and the stragglers took the total somewhat beyond that figure.

It was a college crowd. Columbia occupied the west stand with its cheering horde, and Princeton the new big stand on the east side of the field. The two divisions vied with one another, before the game began, in urging on their favorites with songs and cheers. The volume of sound was overwhelmingly favorable to Columbia, but the wonderful concert of the Princeton students in their singing and cheering did much to counterbalance the numbers of the opposition. The two sections in which the Tiger sympathizers were largely centred spoke with a single voice, and the effect of their singing was splendid.

From a football viewpoint there was little in the play aside from the closeness of the contest to enthuse over. There were no spectacular runs and only five gains of more than ten yards at any period in the play. The backing up of the secondary defense of each team was excellent, and the few times that the Tiger backs did get away for end runs they were brought down not by one tackle but by four or five at once.

Never did either team get a fast consistent attack into working order. The nearest approach to it followed the first Princeton touchdown and led to the second. Then for the first time Dillon got the Nassau backs away fast and into the opposing tackles with good quick interference to aid them and the short runs were the result. That only lasted, however, until the ball reached Columbia's fifteen-yard line, when the slow, tedious assaults on the centre and guards resulted.

There were many delays. Penalties were awarded to each team a half dozen times. Once interference with a catch was the cause, and gave Columbia 15 yards. Once flagrant holding gave Princeton a similar penalty. Offside play was frequent, and interference in the centre occurred no less than six times during the game. It was not a clean contest in that sense, though in the sense of roughness there were only two brief moments when anything like a mix-up seemed imminent. There was no kneeing or piling up of players when downed.

Viewed critically, the defense of the Columbia team was an immense improvement over anything they have shown during the year. Princeton's defense was good in the second half, but in the first the weakness of the Tigers at right tackle was painfully apparent. Philips, who played the place, was far below 'Varsity calibre, and unless Herring, the regular 'Varsity man, is much stronger, the Yale attack will sift through there to the overwhelming of the Tigers' hopes of victory. The centre of the line seemed impregnable. The ends did none too good work, but the backs when McCormick was in the game at full back did splendid work, both in plunging and picking openings at end. They formed a good interference on these plays and appeared stronger at this than in going into the line.

The formidable Cooney, the nightmare that has been haunting Columbia for two weeks past, was not particularly noticeable when his reputation is considered. It is true he never failed to gain, but the idea that he was a great Juggernaut, calculated to crush all those who opposed his path, was dissipated into thin air. It takes a great line to make possible such gains as Cooney made against Yale last year, and the Tigers have not a great line by any means.

If Columbia had eleven Von Saltzas there would be a different story to tell. The green tackle who played his first game behind the line not so long ago was the main factor in Columbia's success in attack. He plunged phenomenally fast, and, while hitting the line at great speed, picked his openings well.

He was by long odds the best individual gainer of the day, and rarely failed to make twice his length when called upon. But the strain was too much for him. He was taken out, and thereafter Columbia's attack was puerile.

Fisher gained a bit and so did Carter, but these men were poor seconds to Von Saltza in running. Carter kicked splendidly, getting his kicks away from the closing forwards in bully style, and made good distance with most of them. His end, especially Fischer, covered his kicks nicely, outplaying the Tiger ends at this, though Bard's kicks were rather longer than Columbia's on the average.

Princeton played exclusively a kicking game in the first half, which was poor judgment, unless it was done for practice purposes. The Bard drive is not especially long, and the ends are not especially fast, so that it is poor policy for Nassau to depend on this play. They are both good enough for defensive purposes. The Tigers kicked on the first down and gave Columbia the ball every time it came into their hands in the early game, and it was from midfield that Columbia attacked their line.

At the start of the game, after an exchange of kicks, Columbia received fifteen yards for interference, taking the ball into Tiger territory to the forty-five-yard line. Then one play after another was sent into the Nassau right tackle, and each gained steadily toward Princeton's goal. Von Saltza carried the spheroid six times, Carter four, and Fisher three. The thirteen downs took the leather an aggregate of twenty-three yards, the last three plays netting but a yard a piece and costing the ball on the twenty-two-yard line.

Princeton kicked to midfield, where the ball changed hands twice on alternate fumbles. Then from the forty-five-yard line Columbia gained ten and kicked to Princeton's fifteen-yard line. Bard, who caught, advanced it ten yards. Here a kick was signaled, and while the ball was in the air a Princeton man held on the twenty-five-yard line, and the leather came back and went to Columbia on the spot as a first down. It was a most unusual penalty, and gave Columbia a great opportunity, but they were only able to advance ten yards before Nassau secured the leather on downs.

Still Princeton continued to exchange kicks, gaining on each, but never attempting to run the ball. Slowly Columbia was forced back until a penalty of 15 yards for holding took the Blue and White back to their 35-yard line. From here Carter kicked to five yards beyond midfield.

Then for the first time Cooney called for offensive tactics. Bard, Daub, Cooney, and Bard were sent into the line. Two and three yards resulted each time. This was repeated, Otis, Bard, and Cooney going in. Steadily the spheroid advanced, and it looked like a touch-down. It was inside the 25-yard line. Daub made a yard, then Cooney two. Daub was called on, but he lacked three inches of his distance, and Columbia secured the ball on the 18-yard line. A kick took it back to midfield, and there it was when time was called.

Princeton after kicking off in the second half got the ball in midfield, when Columbia was forced to punt it back. Then another such attack as marked the first half began. Seventeen plays were sent into the Blue and White line from tackle to tackle, averaging three yards to a play. McCormick did the greater part of the work and a touchdown seemed sure. But Columbia held on the three-yard line. Columbia only kicked out to the 35-yard line and Dillon made his only run back of 15 yards. It took six plays to cover the twenty yards remaining to the goal line, McCormick scoring and Cooney kicking the goal.

Princeton got her second opportunity when she forced Columbia to punt after she had returned the kick off past midfield. The ball was gained on the 30-yard line. Dillon started with a 15-yard quarter back run. Bard and then McCormick added 15 around either end. Daub circled again for 15 yards more and the leather in four plays was 20 yards from Columbia's goal. Then the line attack began again and over went McCormick in six more plays. Again Cooney kicked the goal.

There was only time remaining for Princeton to return the kick-off past midfield and brace for Columbia's attacks into the line. Two penalties helped Columbia, and Carter made an eight-yard plunge through Princeton's right tackle. Then as they faced each other for another play the referee's whistle ended the game. The two teams lined up as follows:

CORNELL, 57; HAVERFORD, 0.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, Oct. 28.—Haverford did not put up even a practice game for Cornell to-day. The final score was 57 to 0, although the Ithacans made no effort to run the figures high. A full 'Varsity team was not sent on the field in the beginning, and many substitutions were made throughout the contest. The Pennsylvanians were unable to gain hardly a first down against the Cornell defense, and were helpless when Coach Warner's well-drilled formations came plowing through the line or circled the ends. Between the halves a game of pushball between teams of freshmen and sophomores picked from the Cornell squad furnished much amusement. It was the first time that a pushball game had ever been seen on Percy Field. The game was received with great enthusiasm. Neither team scored, although the freshmen got the big ball to the sophomores' five-yard line once. The football line-up was as follows:

Cornell, 57.	Position.	Haverford, 0.
Roadhouse, Schilmiller	Left end	Ramsey
Thompson, Downes	Left guard	Wood

YALE TALLIES TWENTY AGAINST WEST POINT

Blue Plays Good Football and Keeps Cadets from Scoring.

ARMY MAKES STRONG FIGHT

Soldiers Carry the Ball Sixty Yards Before Held for Downs on Eli's Three-Yard Line.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, Oct. 28.—Yale defeated West Point in their annual football battle to-day by the score of 20 to 0. Three times the sons of Eli crossed the cadets' goal line, and once the soldier boys were forced to touch back for safety. Yale won by clean, straight football, and displayed the best form of the season. In view of the surprisingly strong game put up by West Point on the preceding Saturday against Harvard, a close score was expected by the followers of the military team. For ten minutes it looked very much as though West Point might beat Yale, but after carrying the ball sixty yards by short rushes, the cadets weakened, and the New Haven players recovered their true form and outplayed their opponents during the remainder of the game. Yale secured 6 points in the first half through a fumble. With this exception there was little to choose between the two teams, but in the second the Yale men's superior condition told, and their goal line was never in danger.

A dress parade by the cadets preceded the contest, and when the two teams faced each other over 4,000 persons surrounded the playing field, many of the visitors coming from New York. Yale opened auspiciously, securing the ball on West Points' twenty-yard line, when Beavers fumbled Jones's kick-off. Two minutes later Veeder scored the first touchdown for Yale. This put the soldiers on their mettle, and they ripped up the Yale line in the most approved fashion. Hockenberger, Bigelow, and Forbes were used as objective points, and nearly all the gains were made through these three men. The ball was carried to within three yards of the Yale line, when a touchdown seemed certain for West Point, the Yale defense being poor and unable to stop the cadets' rushes. An effort to circle the ends proved West Points' undoing. Shevlin and Cates were alert, and when Beavers tried to get around Cates he was thrown for a loss, and Yale secured the ball on downs. This was the only real chance the cadets had to score, as the Yale players improved as the game progressed, and in the end held their opponents in perfect safety.

Had West Point met Yale instead of Harvard the preceding Saturday, they might have reversed the score, as they were in better physical condition in that game, while Yale was in poor shape. Yale's offensive play to-day showed material improvement, and after the first ten minutes their defense was much superior to that shown in any other game this season. West Point opened the game by running low, while Yale tackled too high to be effective. This defect, however, gradually disappeared. There was some delay in getting off the Yale plays, Capt. Shevlin giving the quarter back no chance by reason of a constant changing of signals.

Jones, the Andover freshman, was easily the star of the game. He gave his signals clearly and unhesitatingly. He mixed up well in all the plays, but his magnificent run of 45 yards, unaided, through the entire West Point team, for a touchdown, was one of the most spectacular sprints ever witnessed on the gridiron. His dodging was superb, and he easily shook off the cadets during his run. Veeder proved a tower of strength, and with Flinn made the biggest gains. The tackles and guards were weak, but the ends frustrated every effort of the Cadets to gain ground in their direction. Beavers and Torney showed the best form on the West Point eleven.

West Point won the toss and selected the north goal, giving the ball to Yale to kick against a strong wind. Jones sent a long low ball to Beavers on the Army 20-yard line. It bounded out of Beavers's hands and Cates fell on it. Short rushes were made by Yale, when Veeder was sent through Weeks for five yards, and on the next play the same player ran around outside tackle for seven yards and carried the ball over the line for a touchdown. Veeder kicked the goal, which was an easy one. Score: Yale, 6; West Point, 0.

Beavers kicked to Yale's 20-yard line, where Bigelow fumbled, but recovered the ball out of bounds. Flinn was thrown for a loss on a fake kick and Jones's attempt to go through Weeks lost two more yards to the visitors. Flinn punted to his own 50-yard line, where Beavers was thrown hard by Cates. The Army drove the Yale line back by short rushes and Yale was penalized five yards for off side play. Beavers hit the left side of the Yale line for three yards and Weeks added three through Bigelow. He followed this with three yards past Hockenberger and made the necessary distance through centre on the next play.

Weeks and Beavers alternated in carrying the ball between guards and tackles for short gains, Bigelow, Hockenberger, and Forbes being the weak spots. Torney was pushed past Bigelow for three yards, and Beavers added a like distance around right tackle. Weeks negotiated three yards on the left side of the Yale line, and added four more on the next play. Beavers, Weeks, and Torney tore up the Yale line by short, hard plunging, placing the ball on Yale's four-yard line. Capt. Shevlin called to his men for a final rally, and Weeks's next assault was stopped. Weeks added one yard, and Beavers was West Point's hope. He tried to circle the left end, but ran outside of his interference, and was thrown out of bounds for a loss, Yale securing the leather on downs.

Veeder punted from behind the goal line, a distance of fifty yards, Beavers being downed on Yale's forty-yard line. Beavers tried the left end, but lost three yards. Weeks smashed the centre for six, and Beavers tried for a field goal from Yale's forty-seven yard line. The ball was ten yards short of the cross bar. Flinn fumbled the kick, but fell on the ball on Yale's five-yard line. He redeemed himself by going through the Army's centre for ten yards. Flanders was offside, and Yale was sent back ten yards. Yale failed to gain, and Veeder punted to midfield. Beavers made a fair catch and tried a place kick. The wind carried the ball to the corner of the field. Jones ran the ball back to the Yale twenty-yard line. Veeder and Flinn began an attack on Weeks, and made substantial gains. Yale fumbled, but Bigelow secured the ball. Jones hit the Army's right tackle for ten yards, and Flinn duplicated the play. Veeder added five more when the whistle blew for half time. Score, Yale, 6; West Point, 0.

No changes were made in either team for the second half. Beavers kicked over the line and Veeder punted to Garey from the twenty-five-yard line. The latter fumbled, and Torney finally secured the leather. Beavers tried a fake kick, but lost ten yards. By clever dodging he made up the distance on the next play, Veeder throwing him on West Point's forty-five-yard line. Beavers punted to Yale's ten-yard line, Flinn running the ball back thirty yards before being downed. Veeder ran twenty-five yards around left end, being cleverly tackled by Torney. On a tandem play Flinn hit the West Point line for twenty-seven yards, Bigelow, Morse, Veeder, and Jones forming the tandem. Morse smashed Weeks for ten yards, carrying the ball to the Army fifteen-yard line.

Yale's eagerness cost her fifteen yards for holding. Veeder made up five of the loss through centre, when Hockenberger hurt his shoulder and retired in favor of Mackay. Morse made a couple of yards through centre, and another tandem, headed by Flinn, brought Yale ten yards nearer the West Point goal line. West Point then held for downs and secured the ball on her own fifteen-yard line. Beavers tried another fake kick, but Shevlin broke through, and, making a splendid tackle, threw Beavers over his own goal line for a safety. Score: Yale, 8; West Point, 0.

Beavers kicked out to Flinn at midfield, where he was thrown by Christy. Short rushes carried the ball to West Point's forty-two-yard line, where Beavers was knocked out and retired in favor of R. H. Smith. Veeder ran around the left end for twelve yards, and Devine was substituted for Flinn. Morse and Veeder carried the ball by short plunges to West Point's fifteen-yard line. Veeder added four yards through left tackle, and followed with a touchdown through left guard. He made a good kick-out, and scored the goal. Score: Yale, 14; West Point, 0.

Morse and Stevenson were taken out of the game, Stevenson and Wiley being substituted. Torney's kick was declared offside, and West Point was penalized 5 yards. Stevenson carried the next kick back to Yale's 30-yard line. In four plays Yale made 10 yards through West Point's line. Stevenson went through centre for 8 and Devine added 6 around left tackle. Short dashes carried the ball to West Point's 15-yard line. Wiley added 3 yards, when the cadets braced and held for downs. Torney punted to Jones on the West Point 45-yard line. The Yale quarter back zigzagged across the field, dodging one after another of the West Point players, and throwing off Gillespie, Christy, and Moss, he planted the ball squarely behind the goal posts and afterward kicked the goal. Score: Yale, 20; West Point, 0.

With only one minute to play, Torney kicked to Jones. Stevenson punted in return and Torney again kicked to midfield, when time was called. The line-up:

HARVARD, 10; BROWN, 0.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 28.—By straight plunging football with but few variations and a sturdy defense Harvard scored a touchdown in each half of the game with Brown to-day, but the first try at the goal was missed, while in the second the kick-out was spoiled by Dennie of Brown running out and catching the ball. Two runs by Schwartz, the Brown quarter back, for 20 yards each were the longest of the game, but were of little benefit to the visitors. Penalties were frequent, Harvard losing 20 yards, while Brown lost 42 yards.

There was little spectacular in the game, and mass plays predominated. Harvard's first score was made from a start on Brown's 53-yard line, 10 yards of it being on a penalty against Brown. The start for the second score was made on Harvard's 13-yard line, the ball being carried without loss for 97 yards.

Harvard started the playing by kicking off to Brown's 5-yard line, and for the first five minutes the officials were kept busy sending the teams back on infringements of the rules. At last the Harvard offense got started on Brown's 50-yard line, and thirteen rushes gave a touchdown, Knowlton carrying the ball over. Burr missed the goal. The balance of the half was uninteresting.

Shortly after the start on the second half Schwartz, the Brown quarter back, fooled the Harvard eleven, and made a fine dash around his own right end for 20 yards, but his team could not gain another yard on three rushes, and Adams was obliged to kick. Then Harvard worked the ball back from her 13-yard line toward the Brown goal. On the Brown 25-yard line Harvard was sent back for holding, but on the next play Foster by a fine dash for 13 yards made up the lost distance. Six more rushes enabled the Crimson to push Carr over for the second score, a Brown penalty of 2½ yards assisting in the ground gaining.

The kick-out was high, but Dennie of Brown caught the ball, and spoiled Harvard's chance for a goal.

Schwartz's second run for 20 yards was the only feature of the balance of the game.

Harvard rushed 54 times for 193 yards, and had 24 first downs. Her backs kicked 6 times for 236 yards. Brown rushed 31 times for 69 yards, and had 7 first downs. Her backs kicked 9 times for 253 yards. Line-up:

Harvard, 10.	Position.	Brown, 0.

SWARTHMORE, 6; NAVY, 5.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Oct. 28.—The Midshipmen lost their first game of the season today, as well as being scored on for the first time. Swarthmore proved too strong for the naval eleven and won a well-played game by a score of 6 to 5. Swarthmore scored in the first half, McDonough making the touchdown, and the goal was kicked by Crowell. The Navy forced Ghormley over the line for a touchdown in the second half. Norton missed an apparently easy goal.

The victory was well earned, for the visitors made at least five yards to the Midshipmen's one. In the first half Swarthmore carried the ball seventy yards without losing it before the touchdown was made. The Navy was within striking distance of their enemies' goal in the second half, when Ghormley's partially blocked kick was recovered by Piersol on Swarthmore's eighteen-yard line. The Midshipmen got five yards for off-side play, and by a supreme effort made the only substantial gains of the day through the visitors' line, thus scoring their touchdown. The Swarthmore team is one of the heaviest in the country, and greatly outweighed the Navy. The line-up:

Navy, 5.	Position.	Swarthmore, 6.
Piersol	Left tackle	Millman
Causey	Centre	Coble

STEVENS, 23; N. Y. UNIVERSITY, 0.

Stevens surprised the New York University eleven at Ohio Field yesterday by outplaying the home team in every department of the game and winning by a score of 23 to 0. New York's only chance came in the latter part of the first half, when steady rushes, varied by brilliant quarter back runs, carried the ball to the Hoboken team's thirty-yard line. Here Stevens held, and Connell's try for a field goal fell about a yard short. Nothing was scored in the firs half. Line-up:

Stevens, 23.	Position.	N. Y. U., 0.

PENN'S LUCKY VICTORY.

Outplayed by Indians, the Quakers Win Through Aid of Officials.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 28.—Although outplayed in all departments of the game the University of Pennsylvania football eleven today defeated the Carlisle Indians by the score of 6 to 0. It was a lucky victory for the Red and Blue, and carries very little credit with it. The decisions favored the Quakers, whose repeated offside plays were overlooked by the officials. The redskins gave Pennsylvania the hardest game of the year, and had the latter been penalized according to the rules, the game would probably have terminated in a reversal of the score. The Indians were very strong on the defensive, and held Pennsylvania for downs several times, while the backs tore through the line for big gains. After working the ball from their own forty-yard line to within twenty-five yards of Penn's goal line by fierce plunges, the ball was unjustly taken from the Indians and given to Penn. The only score of the day was made by Lamson after Greene had made thirty-five yards through the Indians on a fake kick. Jude, the little right end and rush of the Indians, on two different occasions secured the ball on fumbles, having a clear field each time, but luck was against the redskins, and the runner was downed before gaining any great distance.

Three times in the first half the Indians, being unable to gain against Pennsylvania's line, tried field goals, but each attempt failed. In the second half the Quakers seldom got the ball, the play most of the time being in her territory.

For the first ten minutes in the opening half the Indians had Pennsylvania on the defensive. Kicks from both sides were frequent and penalties inflicted, mostly on the Indians. In an exchange of kicks, Pennsylvania got the ball near midfield. On the first line up Greene broke through for a thirty-five-yard run, and Lamson was pushed over for a touchdown. Sheble kicked the goal.

In the second half the Indians took a brace and with fine offensive work endangered Pennsylvania's goal three times, but could not score. The Quakers kicked the ball out of danger whenever they secured possession, making little effort to advance it by line plays. For the Indians, Jude, Dubois, Mount Pleasant, and Bowen were seen to advantage, while Greene, Lamson, and Sheble did the best work for the Quakers. Line-up:

TRI-CITY GOLF CUP WON BY NEW YORK TEAM

Boston Beaten After Hard Fight by 9 Points to 6.

VISITORS LED IN MORNING

Overconfidence Almost Cost Local Players the Victory in Final Match at Garden City.

New York beat the Boston golf team yesterday in the final tri-city golf team match by the score of 9 points to 6. Boston brought a strong delegation of ten players to the Garden City Club course both for the purpose of heralding its admission into the annual team competitions between the New York and Philadelphia players and also to carry back to Boston, if possible, the new trophy offered for these annual tri-city meetings by Robert W. Lesley of Philadelphia.

So well, in fact, did the visitors play that they led by two points at the end of the morning's eighteen-hole individual team play. This was an unexpected shock to the local contingent, as practically all of the men from Travis down had driven off in a buoyant manner, apparently imbued with the belief that it was only necessary to play around the course and be returned certain winners. It was a costly bit of overconfidence, for of the ten matches the Bostonians won six and the New Yorkers only four.

With almost certain defeat staring them in the face Capt. Travis urged every man to play careful and steady golf in the four-ball foursome contest in the afternoon. The result furnished another surprise, and this time the Bostonians had to taste disappointment, for the local players took every match, therefore adding five points to their four of the morning. By a margin of three points, therefore, the Lesley trophy remains with the Metropolitan Golf Association for the coming year.

Walter J. Travis and A. G. Lockwood, the latter the champion of Massachusetts, led off in the morning. Travis was in good form, although not as brilliant as he had been the preceding day. He led by one hole on the ninth green, and, forging more rapidly ahead on the homeward holes, won by 3 up and 2 to play. The bye holes were finished, and Travis did 78.

Jerome D. Travers and Hugo R. Johnston were the next pair. The youngster from New York had little difficulty in maintaining a lead over his opponent, and won by 4 up and 3 to play. Malcolm McBurney, the Harvard student, then gave the first victory to Boston by defeating Archibald Graham by one hole. Findlay S. Douglas, who has been doing little golf this season, found an easy opponent in the Boston Captain, George H. Crocker, and won by 7 up and 5 to play. Then came a surprise to the local crowd, for the metropolitan champion, Charles H. Seely, came trampling in defeated by C. B. Cory by 8 up and 1 to play.

John M. Ward added a ray of good cheer to the New York team's chances by beating P. W. Whittemore, one of the crack Brookline Country Club golfers, by 4 up and 3 to play. Ward has seldom played steadier golf, and his medal play score, 77 strokes, was the best of the day. He led Whittemore by one on the turn. It was a splendid match from the first to the home hole. The cards are:

Ward, out	4	4	4	4	4	5	5	4	3—37
Whittemore, out	5	3	4	5	4	5	5	3	4—38
Ward, in	5	4	4	6	4	4	5	5	3—40	—77
Whittemore, in	6	5	5	5	4	5	4	5	3—42	—80

Of the remaining four matches New York was doomed to defeat in all. James G. Thorp, one of Boston's veterans, beat the Princeton student, Ralph Peters, Jr., by 3 up and 2 to play; James F. Curtis, an ex-intercollegiate champion, beat Percy Pyne, also an old intercollegiate champion, by 2 up and 1 to play; Percy Gilbert beat Charles B. Macdonald by 3 up and 1 to play, and T. G. Stevenson put Harold Wilcox out by one hole.

The closest and most exciting match in the afternoon foursomes was that between Travis and Wilcox against Lockwood and Cory. It was a bitter fight, and when on the home hole honors ended even, a large crowd gathered to watch the play for the nineteenth hole. Travis and Wilcox excelled in their long shots, and a long put on the green gave them the game. All of the other matches were won by low scores. Travers and Macdonald beat Johnston and McBurney by 2 up and 1 to play, and by the same score Douglas and Pyne beat Whittemore and Curtis. Graham and Seely showed improvement over their golf of the morning and beat Thorp and Crocker by 3 up and 2 to play, and Ward and Peters beat Stevenson and Gilbert by the same figures. MILITARY RACE PICTURESQUE Four Out of Six Favorites Successful—Meeting Likely to be Repeated Next Year.

Stamped with the seal of success so unmistakably that there is little doubt that a regular steeplechase meet will hereafter be a feature of the local racing season, the three-day experimental meeting of the United Hunts Racing Association came to its close yesterday at Morris Park with an attendance conservatively estimated at 8,000. A picturesque and eventful programme of races was offered, and there were many opportunities for the expression of the enthusiasm with which the crowd was evidently filled, and Liffey Bank, the winner of the Orange County Hunt Steeplechase, and Ben Crockett, first horse in the Great United Hunts Steeplechase, were heartily applauded.

The evils of steeplechasing, which certainly do not lessen its attractions in the eyes of its devotees, were emphasized by a number of falls, the worst of which was sustained by Aantilo Devereux, whose mount, Crow Wing, fell at a hedge and fence jump, Mr. Devereux fracturing three ribs and dislocating his shoulder. Despite these injuries Mr. Devereux witnessed the following races, though later he resorted to the Fordham Hospital for treatment. Just before he fell Crow Wing, whose fine race a week ago justly placed him the favorite, made one of the most sensational jumps seen hereabout in a long time. Adjutor, ridden by Singleton Van Schaick, refused a jump when running just ahead of Crow Wing and went to his knees. Mr. Devereux had no time to pull up, and it looked as if a bad accident was impending. But Crow Wing and his rider were equal to the emergency. Over the fallen Adjutor, his prostrate rider, and the post and rail fence at the same time they flew, amid a storm of cheers from the spectators.

The promoters of the meeting were plainly pleased at the reception which the public accorded to their efforts. The receipts of the three days were large enough to pay all expenses and leave something over. Perry Belmont, President of the United Hunts Racing Association, expressed his own satisfaction and that of the other officials of the association, adding that efforts would in all probability be made to repeat the meeting next season, though by what means or at what time of the year remained to be determined.

About the track the scenes were quite like old times. The spacious lawn was comfortably populated with eager spectators, the field was a still busier place, while the paddock and clubhouse inclosure even reminded one of the gay assemblages that used to congregate there to see the thoroughbreds in the Withers Milo or the Metropolitan Handicap. Society was out in force, and its representatives were by no means exclusively from the hunting set.

Conspicuous among the visitors were Gen. and Mrs. Frederick D. Grant, and Admiral and Mrs. Coghlan, who came to the track as guests of Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont in their automobile. On the clubhouse veranda were also Mrs. Adolf Ladenburg and Mrs. J. L. Kernochan, cleverest of American women who ride to hounds. Alfred G. Vanderbilt drove the coach Venture, having aboard a "stag party" composed of Bradish Johnson, Jr., O. W. Bird, Leonard Jacob, Scott Cameron, Reginald Brooks, J. Searle Barclay, and Monson Morris. W. R. H. Martin also drove his coach to the track, while E. C. Potter was there with his brake. On the Squadron A coach A. R. Whitney was whip. Among the other hundreds present were Mr. and Mrs. Temple Gwathmey, Mr. and Mrs. Richard F. Carman, Mrs. James E. Martin, Mrs. J. B. Eustis, Mrs. F. Edgerton Webb, Mrs. R. Livingston Beekman, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Mrs. Henry Rogers Winthrop, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Widener, Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Heckscher, J. J. Apgar, Harry Alexander, L. Trowbridge Martin, Edward Crowninshield, Robert Gerry, Peter Gerry, Mr. and Mrs. Prescott Slade, H. J. Morris, Dave Hennen Morris, W. Gould Brokaw, Pierre Lorillard, Andrew Miller, F. R. Hitchcock, and S. S. Howland. In addition to Gen. Grant, Gen. Wade and other army officers were present to see the running of the military steeplechase.

A pretty stiff journey was this principal stake of the day, the Orange County Hunt Steeplechase. For this contest only hunters belonging to hunt clubs associated with the United Hunts Racing Association, and ridden by members, were eligible. The distance was about four miles, and the jumps included two post-and-rail fences and a particularly terrifying stone wall in front of the grandstand. Five of the twelve entries were wisely withdrawn, since they had little chance, leaving the pick of the lot. Crow Wing, Balford, and Owlssa, the last two being from the Middlesex Hunt and coupled in the betting, carried most of the money, Crow Wing being made the favorite at 7 to 10.

Though a strong runner and a splendid fencer, Crow Wing is a hard horse to rate, and Mr. Devereux had to take such a hold on him in the first round that it is more than likely that he tired him out. At one of the post-and-rail fences Adjutor sat down rather than jump, and Crow Wing made his spectacular leap described above. On the second round, while leading, he fell on the far side of the course. Mr. Devereux, though hurt, tried to catch the gelding, but could not do so until it was too late to be of any service.

With Crow Wing out and Balford and Owalssa going strong at the head of the procession, it looked like a sure thing for the stable, but Owalssa came to grief at the stone wall on the third mile. Mr. Higginson was stunned by the fall, but suffered no other injury, and soon recovered. With Owalssa out, Irish Girl, a 20 to 1 shot, took the lead and held it until Mr. Evans got ready to let his mount down, when Liffey Bey drew away and won very comfortably, Crusader getting up under Mr. Fitzgerald's drive in time to get the place by a length and a half.

After this race, in which all the jockeys were gentlemen riders, came the Great United Hunts Steeplechase, in which only professionals rode. The Phelan pair, Woolgatherer and Ben Crockett, were odds-on favorites, and Crockett was easily the best, winning as he pleased by four lengths. Pagan Bey was the only contender, but he had nothing left to finish with when Heider called on him. There were only five starters, and, though the course was four miles long, there were no falls. The race was worth $2,770 to the winner, in addition to a $250 cup.

The Military Steeplechase, though a picturesque novelty, was commendable rather for the promise of its development at future meetings than for the quality of the sport it offered on its first running. There were five starters, Lieut. Martin of the Fifteenth Cavalry, U. S. A., riding Dominion, a half-bred four-year-old. Squadron A had threa starters, the riders being Putnam A. Bates, W. S. McGuire, and L. Victor Froment, while M. Alpers represented Squadron C of Brooklyn. The race resolved itself into two divisions, the struggle for supremacy being between Mr. Froment, on New Zealand, and M. Alpers, on Silver Twist. These two ran far away from the rest, but after the last jump the Squadron A horse had most left and came away to a five-length victory.

Lieut. Martin's mount, a comparatively green horse, was slow to get going, but had not his rider mistaken the location of the finish line he would have landed in third place. As it was, Mr. McGuire, on Taps, just beat him out. Squire Gray fell at the water jump, but Mr. Bates won a round of applause by remounting and finishing.

After the race Gen. Grant expressed himself as much pleased with the experiment, saying that another year he expected a large representation of army officers in this race. This year, he added, there had not been sufficient time to prepare for it.

Caloorahatchee, the favorite, had an easy thing in the Getaway Steeplechase, while Knight of Elway, second choice in the Hunt Cup, with which the day's card opened, got the verdict from Gen d'Arme, the outsider, after a bumping match all the way. The Stewards called the riders of both horses into the stand, and after hearing their statements declined to alter the order of the finish. There was a stray hiss or two at the decision, but to ninety-nine out of a hundred spectators it seemed correct, as Gen d'Arme began the bumping. Pure Pepper, the odds-on favorite, fell early in the race.

Tweedie's victory in the flat race at six furlongs, with which the day and the meeting ended, brought the number of successful favorites up to four out of six for the afternoon. The summaries:

TO CHANGE YACHTING RULES.

Long Island Sound Association Will Reduce Allowance Scale.

At the Hotel Astor to-morrow night the Yacht Racing Association of Lond Island Sound will hold its annual dinner and regular meeting. The Executive Committee will first convene and then meet the regular delegates of the clubs composing the association to discuss rule changes and regulations to govern yachting during the next season. There will be several suggestions made of minor changes, but it is safe to say no radical departure from the existing standards will be adopted.

The sentiment regarding the operation of the new rule of measurement is decidedly that it has been pre-eminently successful. There is general satisfaction that the plan for uniform rules has been adopted by the New York and Gravesend clubs and also that the Massachusetts and Eastern clubs have fallen into line. It would therefore take pretty strong reasons to secure the adoption of any further changes, and the suggestions to be put forward are unlikely to be passed upon favorably. They include a plan to adopt a scantling restriction to exclude raceabouts from competition with other classes, or an arbitrary action looking to the same end.

The question of the reduction of the scale of allowances will come up and will undoubtedly be adopted. The feeling is very strong that such an action is necessary to protect the bigger boats, as well as those built to the top of the various classes. The extent of the reduction will have to be determined. The general sentiment seems to favor a 10 per cent. decrease, or rather the figuring of allowances on a 60 instead of a 70 per cent. basis.

The other question of restricting competition to amateur skippers, while it meets with general favor, will hardly go through now, for it is considered too radical a change to be made arbitrarily without due notice. Nearly all the delegates agree that its desirability make it probable that it will come in another year or two.

The plans of the various clubs in the association for next year are being gradually perfected. The New York Yacht Club has already announced the intention of building a restricted one-design sixty-foot class if a sufficient number of owners can be induced to go into the class. The chances favor its success.

CEDARSTROME BEAT BAD NEWS FOR STAKES

Long Chance Colt Got Up and Won by a Head on the Post.

PAGET HORSES RAN ONE, TWO

Jacobite Took the Cutchogue Handicap at Jamaica, with Kinleydale Second.

The Stewards of the Jamaica meeting thought long and hard yesterday when Cedarstrome, after a lapse of several races into his bad form, when at short prices, suddenly put forth his best efforts, and at odds of 25 to 1 duplicated his sensational victory at Belmont Park for the Ramapo Handicap, by winning the Southold Handicap. The coincidence, in keeping with the remainder of Cedarstrome's record, that his improvement came in the running of one of the valuable stakes of the Jamaica meeting, further engaged the attention of the Stewards. Though the varied form of the horse excited official comment, no action in the matter was taken, and racegoers were left to wonder how it was that under almost identical conditions as to distance, weight, and riders, Bad News beat Cedarstrome off one day, winning in a gallop three days ago, and in a return race was beaten when the odds against the horses shifted.

Cedarstrome's success took rank as the chief topic of the afternoon, and practically caused bettors to forget their disappointment over the failure of another erratic favorite, S. C. Hildreth's colt Security, which found a new means of getting beaten in the race for the Cutchogue Handicap. In his former effort Security, half brother to Dick Wellee and Ort Wells, and winner of the Great Trial Stakes at Sheepshead Bay, ran out when it looked as if he could not lose, and finished last of a moderate field. He went to the post yesterday equipped with a burr to prevent a repetition of his running out, and with the strong jockey, Dominick, up instead of Miller, he was again backed with great confidence by his stable and the public generally, but Security got off badly, and all but running away with Dominick, rushed into a pocket and on the heels of the leaders, and when he was taken back out of the entanglement was practically out of the race.

Three post favorites were successful, and two second choices captured races, but the failure of Security and Bad News took away a big share of the profits of bettors, as these two horses were looked on as the best betting chances of the afternoon. Bad News, ridden by Knapp, the boy who has been most successful with him, was sent to the post at odds-on, with Race King and Ormonde's Right the next best backed horses, while Cedarstrome drew only a light support, which drove the odds from 30 to 1 down to 25 to 1 at post time.

The race, a mile and a sixteenth, was started with Cedarstrome first away, but Gold Rose at once passed him, and going on in the lead set the pace to the head of the stretch, Cedarstrome racing well up to that point, where Bad News and Ormonde's Right closed, and passed Gold Rose, the finish as the horses turned into the straight seeming to be between the two. Bad News wore down Ormonde's Right in the run into the last half furlong, and had just begun to look like a winner, when Cedarstrome made his run from the rear, and, closing with the same burst of speed that he showed in the Ramapo Handicap, got up in the last stride and won by a head, with Bad News, ridden out, second, a neck in front of Ormonde's Right.

Security held the place of favorite from first to last in the Cutchogue Handicap, and in spite of his being the top weight the tip that he would win was broadcast. Eight horses ran, the Paget Stable entry, Jacobite and Kinleydale, starting second choice, with Inquisitor the next best backed. Security seemed to hang a bit when the barrier rose, and dropped back into last place as Jacobite slipped to the front after Zienap led away, Kinleydale following him and the Paget horses being first and second in the first half furlong and holding the places to the end. Security went after his field with a remarkable burst of speed, and was with his horses again in a half furlong, but ran on the heels of Inquisitor, Zienap, and Hermitage, and Dominick had to pull him back for fear of cutting down one of them. Security then went around his field and took fourth place, but he never was able to get to the leaders. Jacobite won easily, away off before his stable mate, second, while Hermitage lasted to beat Security a head for third place. Summary:

BOSTON HORSES WIN.

Jordan's Entries Capture Four Blues—Vanderbilt's Pair First.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Ill., Oct. 28.—Blue ribbons went Bontonward to the last of the Horse Show, and four of Eben D. Jordan's horses got prizes to-day. Hildred took the blue ribbon for horses, single, lady to drive, and also in the champion harness class at night from Mr. Vanderbilt's Fancy. Electric Light and Lord Burleigh got the prize for the park tandem pair, and Even Domino, the pony, got the prize in the saddle class.

Mr. Vanderbilt's pair, Astonishment and Amazement, took first prize in the contest for J. H. Moore's purse of $250 or plate for harness horses.

Notes of the Thoroughbreds.

Athlone, owned by J. L. McGinnis and entered to sell for $900 in the fifth race at Jamaica yesterday, was bid up to $2,100 by Jules Garson, owner of the second horse, Goldfleur, and H. T. Griffin, acting separately, McGinnis retaining the horse for $2,105.

M. L. Hayman was bought from the Osceola Stable, owned by T. L. Watt, the four-year-old Plaudit filly Ancestor on private terms. Ancestor is intended for Winter racing.

J. S. McDonald has transferred to Mathew Corbett and Frederick Johnson the contract he secured last Spring on the lightweight rider Dickson, whom he took to France for a period in the early part of the season. Dickson, it is said, did not have a fair chance in France, but since his return to America he has shown excellent promise as a jockey.

The filly Sunray, owned in the name of the Grasslands Stable and trained by P. M. Burch, which won at long odds at the Jamaica track last week, has been sold on private terms to W. E. French.

Automobile Notes of Interest.

A meeting of the Racing Board of the American Automobile Association will be held within a few days, when some action is likely to be taken upon the road racing events of next year. The letter from the Automobile Club of France is expected at any time, and as soon as the sentiment of the French club regarding the future of the Vanderbilt Cup is definitely known plans can be laid for the next running of the race.

Since the preliminary organization of the new motor boat club last week enough extra names have been added to the membership list to bring the total close to 100. The Committee on Nominations will be ready to report in a few days, and with the adoption of a constitution and a possible change in racing rules plans for racing and cruising events next season will be outlined.

A reunion of Oldsmobile owners will be held on the afternoon of election day, Nov. 7. Every owner of an Oldsmobile in New York and neighboring cities has been invited to meet at noon at Broadway and Fifty-first Street, and from there the party will run to the Empire City track, where they will be the guests of the Oldsmobile Company of New York at luncheon. A number of short races and gymkhana events will be run off on the track. This reunion will celebrate the fifth anniversary of the Oldsmobile in New York. There are now over 800 Oldsmobiles owned in this vicinity and 15,000 to 20,000 in general use throughout the world.

Greater automobiling activity in the Winter is foreshadowed by the fact that the Fall sales of closed cars are much larger than in previous years. Luxurious limousines, both imported and domestic, are being sold to men of means. The main demand comes from the big cities, but where good roads prevail electrics are being sold in the suburban districts.

Injecting kerosene into a cylinder, which is approved by some and discountenanced by others, will cause a reddish deposit to form on the spark plug after the engine has been running for a while. This is usually ascribed to over-lubrication.

Louis S. Ross, who, with his Ross steamer, won the Dewar Cup and most of the other short-distance prizes in Florida last year, is now building steam touring cars for the market. He says he will re-enter racing with a new car.

President Elliot C. Lee presents these logical reasons for furthering the interests of the American Automobile Association: "With the local club speaking for the individual, the club backed by the State association, and the National organization back of all three, the results are certain to be beneficial and far-reaching. The perfection by the American Automobile Association of its touring bureau, the securing of uniform automobile laws, and the advancement of highway improvement are matters that will receive immediate attention with the gratifying growth of the organization."

Studying the undercurrents and permanent traits in the automobile situation, in order to deduce the tendencies of the future, nothing is more striking than the persistence of the horizontal, opposed engine, which was clung to and brought to perfection, despite the scoffing of all Europe, until it now is recognized as a distinctively American type, and a reliable one. Through all the craze about touring cars with big, vertical-cylinder engines in front, the American horizontal opposed motor has gone on being improved and gaining favor until now, when it is of more than passing interest to note that Oldsmobiles are being not only accepted but eagerly purchased in Europe.

The six-day economy test of the New York Motor Club, beginning to-morrow, will mark the first serious attempt to measure up the automobile against the railroad in a practical way. A big discount should be allowed the motor car on the score of its affording the luxury of a private coach.

Since the Vanderbilt race an intense flame of enthusiasm over road racing has burst forth. The fact that an American car finished third has inspired the manufacturers. The fact that so tremendous a race was run without serious accident has inspired amateur owners.

Decorations that will surpass anything before attempted at an industrial show will be in evidence at the sixth annual automobile show to be held in Madison Square Garden, Jan. 13-20. White and gold will be the predominating colors, and there will be scenic effects of the highest order. There will be a uniformity throughout on decorations, the smallest booth in the balcony receiving the same treatment as the biggest space on the main floor. At the last meeting of the Show Committee, consisting of George Pope, Chairman; M. B. Brock, C. R. Mabley, and M. L. Downs, it was reported that the applications for space had been received far in excess of the space to be allotted.

The Decauville Automobile Company has secured an additional lot adjoining its new garage at Fifty-sixth Street and Broadway, and will erect a special building to be devoted to the showing and sale of its special lines of supplies and accessories.

CRESCENT A. C. SHOOTERS CAPTURE MANY TROPHIES

W. W. Marshall Takes Lott Mug in Three Competitions.

SNYDER CUP GOES TO KEYES

C. A. Lockwood Springs Surprise by Finishing First Four Times at Bay Ridge.

The trapshooters of the Crescent Athletic Club of Brooklyn are rapidly getting into form for the more important events which the Shooting Committee is planning for the weekly meetings throughout the season, the shooting yesterday at Bay Ridge being of a decidedly lively and interesting character.

There were eleven events in all decided, three being for monthly trophies and the balance for the usual club prizes. C. A. Lockwood proved the surprise of the day by taking part in five competitions for club trophies, of which he captured four and was second in the other. He received the very liberal handicap of three targets in fifteen at the shoot-off, but when it was seen that he clearly outclassed the rest of the shooters with his allowance it was reduced to one target. This did not affect his efficiency, for he added two more trophies to his list.

Of the three monthly trophies the one presented by Erskine H. Lott, one of the best shots in the club, probably created the most interest. It was a fifty-target affair, shot on three Saturdays, the three best scores to win. Seven shooters started off in the competition, but only four were in at the finish. The trophy, a uniquely designed mug of copper, with silver trimmings, was captured by W. W. Marshall, with a handicap of six, his scores being 47, 36, and 48, a total of 131. A. G. Southworth was second, with 36, 44, and 42, a total of 122; Dr. I. I. Keyes third, with 43, 37, and 41, a total of 121, and W. C. Damron was fourth, with 43, 33, and 36, a total of 112.

Oliver C. Grinnell, with a handicap of one, annexed the Mullerite Trophy, at 25 targets, to his last year's collection by putting together the scores of 25, 23, and 21, a total of 69. The scores follow:

FOOTBALL AT POLO GROUNDS.

Local Club to be Formed to Play the English "Socker" Game.

The recent visit of the English Pilgrim Association football team is already beginning to make itself felt, and a sentiment in favor of "socker" is slowly but surely growing. It cost the promoters of the Britishers' tour $6,000 to introduce the game, under the most favorable auspices, to this country, but the results more than justified the experiment, and it was felt by Sir Charles Kirkpatrick and his associates that their mission had been more than successful.

Before the Englishmen were half way over the ocean on their way to their homes, plans were laid looking to the formation of a league in New York City, which will, as nearly as possible, carry out the late visitors' idea. The Polo Grounds has been secured and local teams will be organized. Games will be played every Saturday afternoon and holidays during the Winter. The project is a comprehensive one, and will, it is expected, lead to a National organization which will eventually act as a controlling body. It is the intention of the local promoters to bring an entirely new element into the game. At present ten clubs, forming the Metropolitan Association Football League, furnish all the Association football played in or around New York. These clubs are composed exclusively of Englishmen, who learned the game on the other side.

An effort will be made to organize teams from the Harlem River boat clubs, New York Athletic Club, Irish-American Athletic Club, Crescent Athletic Club, and other similar organizations. Interclub matches will be played, and a series of games arranged with teams from Philadelphia, Boston, Fall River, Trenton, Wilmington, and other cities where the Association game is played. Competent coaches will instruct the players, and regular practice days selected.

Special attention will be devoted to the schoolboys, with whom it is thought the game will be popular, and the possibility of a school league is being discussed. The recent outcry against the college game is expected to help the introduction of the Association game, as the latter affords the spectators a more spectacular contest, and one almost entirely free from the possibilities of injuries.

It is not intended to interfere in any way with the Metropolitan Association Football League, which is doing excellent work among the British-born players, but the need of an outdoor Winter sport has long been felt by American athletes, and it is found this need can be supplied with Association football. The game can be played from the end of the baseball season to the following Spring. In England games have been played in six inches of snow, and nothing but an unusually severe storm would prevent weekly matches at the Polo Grounds.

Sir Ernest Cecil Cochrane, before leaving for England, predicted a great future for Association football in this country. He paid a flattering tribute to the wonderful energy of Americans, and said he was satisfied that once the principles of the game had been mastered the progress would be so rapid that it would only be a short time before America would meet England on equal terms.

MUST PLAY GAME AGAIN.

Darkness Stopped Association Football Match.

Strenuous play marked the Association football championship match yesterday between the Caledonians, champions of the Metropolitan Association Football League, and the West Hudson Club, which was played at Cosmopolitan Park, Newark, N. J. With the score 4 to 3 in favor of West Hudson, the referee called the game on account of darkness. The game, according to the league rules, must be replayed. Tait, who played a good game against the English Pilgrim team, was seen to advantage, as was Miller. The line up:

Professional Wins Van Cortlandt Golf.

A match of more than usual interest and that was followed by about 300 golf enthusiasts was played yesterday on the Van Cortlandt Park links between the professional, Bernard Nicholls, against the best ball score of Gilman P. Tiffany, and Charles Marshall. The latter had challenged Nicholls to the match, and it was well fought from the first to the last hole. The game was tied several times, but Nicholls just managed to win by one hole.

NEW ATHLETIC BOARD GENERALLY FAVORED

Suggested Formation of a Supreme Court Approved.

HOW CAN IT BE ARRANGED?

Plans to Secure Adoption of Idea Discussed by Prominent Officials of Various Organizations.

The suggested organization of a Board of Review of Sports to assume the position of a court of last resort before which shall be brought for settlement all questions in dispute among amateurs which cannot be amicably or easily adjusted by those directly interested in them, and whose especial function shall be to pass upon the eligibility of participants in athletic contests where the spirit if not the letter of the law has been disregarded, has met with general approbation among the leaders of the various bodies which it is proposed to govern. Not a dissenting voice has been raised against the proposed plan, and on every hand the expression greeting its promulgation has been, "By all means let us have it. But how shall it be brought about?"

With so pronounced a feeling favorable to the idea it ought not to be difficult to bring the plan to the desired consummation, and it is more than likely that active steps in that direction will be taken forthwith. If undertaken at all, it must be approached with a broad spirit of sportsmanship that shall preclude all possibility of a suggestion of ulterior purpose, that shall be free from every feeling of petty jealousy, that shall, in short, insure, indeed compel, the immediate acceptance of the decisions rendered without question. The high ideal that prompts the move must be reflected in every step taken toward its establishment, and in the personnel of the final board there must be that high standing that will at once guarantee its efficiency and high purpose. Simple as this seems it is not an easy matter to begin, and those who have the plan in mind do not propose to jeopardize its ultimate success by too precipitate action.

JAMES E. SULLIVAN,
Secretary-Treasurer Amateur Athletic Union.

On every hand the belief is expressed that the only proper person to head the move is President Roosevelt himself. That the President is heartily in accord with the object desired goes without saying. That he would give his time to its furtherance there is equally little doubt—if the matter is placed before him in its true light. His acceptance of the honorary Presidency of the Olympic Games at St. Louis, and of a similar position at the head of the American Commission of Olympic Sports, augur favorably, no less than his recent action in behalf of the reformation of football to eliminate its brutal features. That success will attend his latest effort none who knows sporting sentiment doubts for an instant, and it is certain that his approval of and active participation in the organization of a so-called Supreme Court of Athletics would equally insure its success. How and when he may accept to move in the matter remains to be determined, but those who know him are confident that it will not be long.

There are some who wish to organize the movement by calling together representatives from all the more important bodies and requesting the President's participation formally. President R. G. Betts of the Motor Cycle League is one of these. Others believe that it is better to have the initiative come from the White House, since that would avert the remote possibility that some one organization might fail to be represented at the preliminary conference. The appointment by the President of a small commission to draft a plan would insure every one's favorable consideration, and every body that governs any branch of sport would be only too glad to help.

One of those who are most enthusiastic over the possibilities of the plan is James E. Sullivan of the Amateur Athletic Union, who has been fighting for pure sportsmanship in athletics for some twenty-five years. His battle has been continuous and unceasing, and while at times it has been discouraging, he has persevered, and to-day sees a hopeful condition of affairs that promises ere long to realize his ambition. The need of some body higher even than the Amateur Athletic Union, that shall compel obedience is recognized by Secretary Sullivan, and he is eager to lend every possible aid.

Dr. Luther H. Gulick of the Public Schools Athletic League, that is doing an important work in the same cause, is enthusiastic and so is F. B. Pratt of the Athletic League of the Young Men's Christian Association. When such men support a plan for the furtherance of the best interests of sport it cannot fail to be benefited, and their indorsement will go a long way to securing its adoption.

In speaking of the general athletic conditions, Secretary Sullivan said yesterday:

"Our experience of twenty-five years in waging an unceasing battle for pure amateurism is bearing fruit. There have been times when we have been bitterly assailed by those whose desire for victory has for the moment beclouded their view of what is fair and sportsmanlike, but in a brief time these men have invariably come to see the impropriety of their position and supported our actions. It is mighty hard for any man whose eye offends him to pluck it out, but relieved of the sting in the course of time, his clearer vision convinces him of his wisdom. So it has been with us.

"We have had to contend against the element that is opposed to those in authority for one or another reason and who construed their every move as interested and sufficient warrant for their removal. These we will always have to fight. As in politics and economics there are those always dissatisfied with the existing conditions and at variance with the governing head, so it is in athletics. The necessity then of some governing head that shall be above such criticism must be patent.

"We have rough professionalism parading in the guise of amateur sport incessantly. One of the greatest evils has been the Summer nine. Every conceivable subterfuge has been employed to make money out of Summer ball without leaving behind traces that will affect one's amateur standing. We have no quarrel with professed professionalism, but it is the sham and false pretense that we abhor.

"So with the crack athletes who become pot hunters and receive money for entering and competing above their legitimate expenses. Direct evidence of abuses is almost impossible to secure. We must act on circumstantial evidence if we are ever to weed these men out. It must advance our cause to have a body that can say, 'The suspicious circumstances surrounding your case make it best for the higher interests of sport that you be excluded from competition, though you may not have infringed the letter of law, and we disqualify you,' and having said it has the power of popular opinion behind it to enforce its decree.

"There is being educated in this country to-day a new sentiment in athletics from which I hope much. The public school movement, through men like Dr. Gulick, is inculcating in the young athlete the abhorrence of dishonesty and unfairness, and these principles instilled early must guide these boys as they grow up to young manhood away from the pernicious practices that obtain in some quarters. The day will come when it will not be regarded as smart to 'beat the rule,' but it will be stamped as disreputable by every competing athlete.

"There are men in athletics to-day who have offended as boys through ignorance whose disqualification might be an injustice. But there is no danger of that ignorance leading others astray in future.

"By all means, let us keep our sport clean and free from unfairness of any kind. Let us build on that basis and we will do more to eliminate 'professional amateurs' than by any other means. Nothing could foster the sentiment for purity like a central commission headed by a man like the President, who stands in the minds of all, friend or foe alike, as a clean, honest, fearless, truthful, fair fighter."

LIGHT ON YALE ATHLETICS.

President Hadley Appoints Committee to Make Thorough Investigation.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Oct. 28.—Acting in response to a letter sent to him by a prominent member of the Yale Faculty, President Hadley has appointed a committee to make a thorough investigation of all alleged abuses regarding the athletics of the university.

This committee consists of Prof. Theodore Woolsey of the Law School, Prof. L. V. Pirsson of the Scientific School, and Prof. Charlton M. Lewis of the academic department.

The whole matter of what is termed athletic abuses will be gone over, including the matter of the predominating influence of the undergraduate's life at Yale, the training table system, the relations of athletics to scholarship, and the charge of financial extravagance in connection with athletics. The forms of the report of the Financial Union and the matter of handling surpluses, which have not appeared in the reports, it is claimed, and which at the present time is believed to be over $60,000, will be the subject of special investigation.

BISHOP SUED FOR $10,000.

Libel Action Against Dr. Robert Codman of Maine.

ROCKLAND, Me., Oct. 28.—A suit for libel in $10,000 against Bishop Robert Codman of the Episcopal diocese of Maine was instituted to-day by William Howard Gardiner of Camden. The case is the outcome of a church feud at Dresden, Me., as the result of which a civil suit for $5,000, also instituted by Gardiner, is now pending in this county against the Rev. Robert W. Plant.

The writ in the Codman case contains three counts, one of which charges him with composing and publishing a letter stating that Mr. Gardiner had been publicly excommunicated by a Bishop. The other counts charge him with being the author of other letters alleging that Mr. Gardiner had been excommunicated for disgraceful charges.

Separate indictments charging criminal libel against Bishop Codman and the Rev. Mr. Plant, found by a Grand Jury of the Supreme Court in Lincoln County at Wiscasset, are before the law court, on exceptions taken by counsel for the defendants as to the sufficiency of the indictments, but no rescript has yet been handed down.

SHOOTS WIFE ON A BRIDGE.

Says She Married Him for His Money and Has Another Husband.

Special to The New York Times.

MOUNT VERNON, Oct. 28.—Convinced that she was the wife of another and that she had married him only for his money, Joseph Gobbles, a German, 47 years old, shot his wife here to-day.

The shooting took place on the Sixth Avenue bridge, and was witnessed by more than fifty persons. Gobbles attempted to escape, but was followed by a crowd of women, who yelled, "Stop that murderer!" Policeman Vollmer caught Gobbles hiding in the cellar of his home. Mrs. Gobbles is in the Mount Vernon Hospital, and it is doubtful if she will recover.

According to the story told by Gobbles, he married his wife about ten months ago in Jersey City. Recently he heard that she had another husband living in New Jersey and that she married him to get his money. Several weeks ago the couple separated, and Mrs. Gobbles went to live in New Rochelle. To-day she came to Mount Vernon with her lawyer, Henry L. Morritt, to demand a settlement. Gobbles was walking across the Sixth Avenue Bridge with his wife and her lawyer when he suddenly wheeled and shot her.

CHICAGO POST OFFICE MOVES.

Man Who Worked Earliest Recorded Bluff Is Present.

CHICAGO, Oct. 28.—The gigantic task of moving the Chicago Post Office into the new quarters in the recently completed $6,000,000 Federal building, without delaying or disturbing the handling of approximately 2,000,000 pieces of mail matter which the office handles daily, began to-day.

The moving began without ceremony, although Senator Hopkins and the majority of the Chicago Congressmen, together with representatives from the Postmaster General's department, were present. There was, in fact, only one bit of sentiment connected with it. Fernando Jones was the hero of it. Mr. Jones not only has the distinction of being one of the few citizens of Chicago who remember when the Chicago Post Office force consisted of one man, but he also owned the first private box in that Post Office, having himself constructed the "box" out of a bootleg and numbered it "36," that he might impress his Eastern friends with the idea that the hamlet was progressive.

DUNNE'S FRIENDS OUSTED.

Seven Dropped from Roll of Municipal Ownership League.

CHICAGO, Oct. 28.—At a meeting of the Municipal Ownership League of this city last night, seven members of the Executive Committee were expelled upon the ostensible ground that they had been absent from two or more successive meetings of the committee. The members expelled were Clarence S. Darrow, special traction attorney for the city; Joseph Medill Patterson, Commissioner of Public Works; Henry M. Ashton, special gas attorney for the city; John C. Harding, member of the Board of Education; Joseph A. O'Donnell, West Park Commissioner; Leopold Saltiel, representing the Turner societies, and E. M. Nockels, Secretary of the Federation of Labor.

Mayor Edward F. Dunne, when informed of the removal of a number of his friends from the Executive Committee of the Municipal Ownership League, said:

"If there is any fight between the Illinois Public Ownership League and the Municipal Ownership League, I have not been asked to take sides in it. I have not formally affiliated with any of the municipal ownership leagues."

THE RAWSON TWINS ARRESTED

Hillsdale's Constables Accused by an Italian of Stealing His Gun.

The famous Rawson twins, Bert and Ned, of Hillsdale, N. J., whose escapades a few years ago were talked of far and wide, now constitute the police force of their native town. They were arrested by telephone yesterday.

Recorder Cumming of Hackensack ordered Constable Dunn to arrest the Police Department of Hillsdale, and Dunn, to save time, called up the twins on the telephone and told them just to come along peaceably and bring bail. The Rawsons obeyed.

Martin Bosillo, the complainant, alleged that the twins had stolen his gun. The Hillsdale Constabulary explained that last Sunday they found Bosillo hunting and arrested him. He was rescued from the twins by several countrymen, but the Constables kept the gun. The case will be heard later.

A similar accusation resulted from an arrest for hunting last Sunday at Etna, N. J. Borough Marshal Harry Haring is accused by Henry Dersch of stealing a diamond ring, earrings, and $15.

TO PROSECUTE DUFFEY LEGALLY, IF POSSIBLE

Secretary Sullivan Intends to Proceed Against Runner.

ALL HIS RECORDS EXPUNGED

Amateur Athletic Union Official Characterizes Confession as Most Startling Ever Made.

James E. Sullivan, Secretary of the Amateur Athletic Union of America, announced yesterday that he was about to take steps to ascertain whether or not Arthur F. Duffey, the world's champion runner, who confessed to falsely posing as an amateur athlete and as such winning championships and creating records, while he was earning his livelihood by his athletic prowess, could be prosecuted legally for his action. He will ask the Intercollegiate Association to co-operate with the A. A. U. to that end, and if any means can be found to begin criminal action they will be entered upon at once.

The first steps to punish the offenses to which Duffey confesses were taken yesterday when the A. A. U. official expunged from the records all of Duffey's achievements and winnings, including his world's record of 9 3-5 seconds for the 100 yards and his world's records for 40, 50, and 60 yards. His name has been erased from the winners' lists and the names of those whom he wrongly deprived of the honors placed there in its stead. Letters have been addressed to all the leading associations under whose auspices Duffey competed requesting similar action. No stone will be left unturned to make an example of him.

Secretary Sullivan characterizes the confession as the "most startling ever made in athletics." Among other things he says:

The confession of Arthur Duffey, made through his manager and by himself, that Duffey has been a professional athlete since the year 1898, is the most startling confession ever made in athletics. Many officials and athletes in the City of New York knew, from statements made quite recently by Duffey, that he intended to make this exposure, and therefore they were not at all surprised. Pity is expressed on all sides for the man who now has it announced that he has been making a living out of athletics, when the officials and others believed him to be an amateur.

That the statement is true, of course, now, all will admit. His confession will, no doubt, be a good thing for amateur sport. It will open the eyes of the athletic officials of the world, who have been hoodwinked for years.

Duffey has certainly concealed his identity in an artistic manner. He has fooled the officials of the Intercollegiate Association and of Georgstown University, who were responsible to the Intercollegiate Association for his entry; he has posed in Great Britain as an amateur and has fooled the officials of the Amateur Athletic Union of Great Britain; he has fooled the officials of the Australasian Amateur Athletic Association of Australia, and the officials of the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States as well.

It is a well-known fact that the officials of the Amateur Athletic Union had decided to refuse a registration card to Duffey in case he should try to compete again. They felt that after his last trip around the country an investigation would naturally be in order, so he voluntarily retired from his amateur position and now exposes himself and purposes to expose others. In England they have a legal committee and a legal fund to prosecute just such athletes as Duffey admits he is, and I firmly believe that the Intercollegiate Association and the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States should appropriate money and proceed to prosecute Duffey, if possible.

No punishment that can be meted out is too severe for Duffey. His name has been fraudulently placed upon our records and he has been given events that he himself admits he was not entitled to, and as editor of the Official Athletic Almanac, which is the recognized athletic almanac of America, I have this day eliminated Duffey's name from the record books, and in future editions of the Almanac such wins as have been credited to him in the past, in England, Australia, and America, I will leave blank, with the hope that the Intercollegiate Amateur Athletic Association, the Amateur Athletic Association of Great Britain, the Australasian Amateur Athletic Association, and the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States will agree with me that this punishment must be imposed on Duffey, and that those who finished second to him in the different events throughout the world will be credited as the winners, and that all of his records will be left out of the Amateur Athletic Union records books.

I am willing to lead this campaign, and I have this day taken from the amatsur records, that I compile the following records of Duffey's:

100 yards, 0:09 3-5, made in Boston, Feb. 13 and March 4, 1899; also Feb. 16, 1901.

50 yards, 0:05 2-5, made in Washington, D. C., Feb. 21, 1904.

60 yards, 0:06 2-5, made in New York City, Nov. 30, 1899, and June 7, 1902.

100 yards, the world's record, 0:09 3-5, made at Berkeley Oval, May 31, 1902.

I have taken his name from the list of America's champions for the year 1899—100-yard championship, 0:10.

On my record book of the Intercollegiate Amateur Athletic Association of America Duffey's name will be stricken from the records of 1901, 1902, and 1903.

His record of 9 3-5 seconds will also be taken from the list of intercollegiate and collegiate records.

On the record of the English champions, now compiled by me for the Athletic Almanac, I will remove his name as the British champion of 1900, 1901, 1902, and 1903, and will also refuse to recognize records made by him in England and Australia during his last trip, and I feel confident that this decision will be applauded by every other compiler of records in America, as we don't want to have our American amateur records held by a man who is a self-confessed professional.

I shall at once enter into correspondence with President Coombs of the Australasian Amateur Athletic Association, Secretary Herbert of the Amateur Athletic Association of Great Britain, President Stillman of the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America, and President Joseph B. Maccabe of the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States, with the hope that they will co-operate with me in every way in taking from their records the name of Arthur Duffey and putting in his place the names of the men from whom he unjustly took the titles.

Of course, it must be thoroughly understood that this decision which I make only refers to the Official Athletic Almanac, which I have edited for the past fifteen years, and which is now the only almanac devoted exclusively to amateur sport. This decision has been made after conference to-day with as many of the prominent college, scholastic, and Amateur Athletic Union men as I could possibly reach, and I think that it is a decision that will be followed up by the different associations of the world, and I only hope that we can get to Duffey in some legal way that will be a lesson in the future to athletes who desire to deceive governing bodies.

ICE SPORT WILL BE LIVELY.

Skating and Hockey Will Begin Saturday at St. Nicholas Rink.

According to the plans of the officials of the Amateur Hockey League the coming season promises to be an unusually active one, with the clubs more powerful than ever in playing strength. As showing the increased interest in the game applications for membership in the teams of the New York Athletic Club, the Hockey Club of New York, the Brooklyn Skating Club, the Wanderers, and the Crescent Athletic Club, the present holders of the Amateur championship, have been on a large scale. With two cups offered for championship competition the season should prove memorable. One of the cups will be put up by Charles Wilder of the Hockey Club of New York, and the other by the Amateur Hockey League.

The St. Nicholas Rink, the home of the hockey players here, will open under the management of P. T. Fisher on next Saturday night, and with the many improvements made to the building, the hockey men will receive better advantages for the display of their abilities.

It is proposed to have a fine ice surface daily for skaters, and throughout the Winter tournaments and other sports will be arranged.

$5,000 IN CUNLIFFE HOME.

Detectives Say Robber's Wife Told Where It Was Hidden.

PITTSBURG, Oct. 28.—Supt. H. J. Bidermsn of the Pinkerton Detective Agency to-day went to the Cunliffe home, 314 Lorenz Street, West End, this city, and in the lining of a baby carriage found a package containing $5,000, part of the $100,000 stolen by Edward Cunliffe from the Adams Express Company.

On the night Cunliffe was brought here from Bridgeport, Conn., where he was captured, he made a written confession to the authorities that he had given $5,000 to his wife. Mrs. Cunliffe, who in the meantime had moved to her father's home at Hartford, Conn., denied that she had the money, notwithstanding that the written confession made by her husband was shown to her. She was repeatedly questioned, however, and to-day, according to the detectives at Hartford, Conn., told where the money could be found. The authorities say there now remains about $6,000 which has not been accounted for.

HARTFORD, Oct. 28.—Mrs. Cunliffe to-night made the following statement:

"I emphatically deny that as a result of any confession made by me $5,000 of the money stolen by my husband was found in a baby carriage in our home at Pittsburg. If the money was found, as stated by Robert A. Pinkerton, it was because of disclosures made by my husband. I maintained, throughout the ordeal to which I was subjected by the detectives, that I had none of the stolen money nor had I hidden any. The allegation of Robert A. Pinkerton regarding a confession made by me is absolutely false."

REFUSED TO AID HIS MOTHER.

She Testifies That Her Son Said He Was Waiting for Her to Die.

In the Orphans' Court in Newark yesterday, Judge Skinner listened to argument on the return of a rule to show cause why Philip Vicidi, a contractor, should not join with his sisters in supporting their mother. The investigation was instituted by Mrs. Diletto Boscaino and Mrs. Philomena Philippone, the woman's daughters. William Vicidi, a grandson of the woman, appeared as counsel for his father and against his grandmother.

Mrs. Vicidi, through an interpreter, testified that twenty-two years ago she transferred all the property she owned in Italy, comprising enough to keep her from want in her declining years, to her son Philip, who was then a shoemaker in Newark. The understanding was, she said, that she was to be taken care of during her life.

"Has your son ever said he would not do so?" asked counsel for the daughter.

"He told me once," returned the witness, "that he waa just waiting for me to die."

The hearing will be continued on Saturday next.

TEARS UP ROCKAWAY TRACKS.

Brackenridge Clears Atlantic Avenue in Defiance of Railroad Company.

In order that the work of improving Atlantic Avenue might be completed after failing to get the company to act, Commissioner of Public Works Brackenridge of Brooklyn had a four-block stretch of the tracks of the Brooklyn and Rockaway Beach Railroad Company torn up yesterday.

A big crowd of East New Yorkers cheered on the gang of 150 men.

After the Long Island tracks were elevated through East New York the Atlantic Avenue Improvement Commission planned to asphalt the street. The Brooklyn and Rockaway Beach Company was requested to either depress its tracks or remove them. It did neither.

BUSINESS SHOW AT GARDEN.

Typewriter Girls to Have Speed Contests—Office Appliances Exhibited.

The second annual Office Appliance and Business System Show opened in Madison Square Garden last night.

Everything in the way of office appliances and improvements that mark the era of labor-saving devices is on exhibition. Here is the patent thumb tack, the wages calculator, and the phonographic stenographer. There also is an orchestra. Besides such matters of interest, there are typewriter girls who are to take part in speed contests and other competitions.

The show will last a week, in which time delegations of business men from many cities will visit it. There will be new attractions every night. Monday's competition will be the adding and listing of 500 cancelled bank checks by hand-power machines for prizes.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Oct. 28.—Leslie Wise, 14 years old, was fatally injured while playing football to-day. He was tackled and fell face downward. He did not rise, and doctors found that a weed had passed up his nostril, penetrated the skull, and torn the covering of the brain. Death resulted at 8 o'clock to-night.

FLORIDA AUTO RACES CALL FOR HIGH SPEED

Winning Car in Two-Mile Event Must Equal 120 Miles an Hour.

CONTESTS FOR ALL CLASSES

Sport Will Begin Jan. 22 at Ormond Beach, and Continue One Week.

Nineteen events for the Florida coast races on the Ormond beach in January have been arranged by the officials of the Florida East Coast Automobile Association. The racing will begin Jan. 22 and will be continued through the week. The contests include five one-mile events, one for kilometer records, one at two miles, four at five miles, four at ten miles, two at fifteen miles, one, a free-for-all championship for American cars, at thirty miles, and a one-hundred-mile event for all cars for the big free-for-all championship cup. The Dewar Cup for the world's one-mile championship will be competed for a second time and a new trophy has been added known as the Minneapolis Cup, donated by the Minneapolis Automobile Club, which is the home club of Asa Paine, the new President of the Florida East Coast Automobile Association.

The events provide for all weights and powers. The two-mile race is a decided novelty in that it stipulates that the winning car must equal or exceed fifty miles an hour. This will be at the rate of a mile in half a minute, a feat that has never been accomplished even under the exceptional racing conditions that the Florida beach affords. The best time ever made there is 32 4-5 seconds for the mile by H. L. Bowden's 120 horse power Mercedes. Some fast racing cars, however, are being prepared to win the two-mile record cup, and it will be a decided triumph in automobile racing speed if the excessive rate demanded to take the cup is maintained. The complete programme of events is:

One-mile middleswight championship, (gasoline.)
One-mile heavyweight championship, (gasoline.)
One-mile championship, (steam.)
One-mile world's championship free-for-all for Dewar Cup.
One-kilometer record trials for each weight and power class.
One-mile record trials for each weight and power class.
Two-mile-a-minute record for free-for-all. (The winner must equal or exceed 120 miles an hour.)
Five-mile middleweight championship, (gasoline.)
Five-mile heavyweight championship, (gasoline.)
Five-mile championship, (steam.)
Five-mile free-for-all championship.
Ten-mile middleweight championship, (all powers.)
Ten-mile heavyweight championship, (all powers.)
Ten-mile free-for-all championship.
Ten-mile handicap, open to contestants who start in previous events.
Fifteen-mile free-for-all championship.
Fifteen-mile price handicap for American touring cars fully equipped.
Thirty-mile free-for-all championship for American-built cars.
One-hundred-mile free-for-all championship.

JOB FOR DEAF-MUTES.

Are Expert at Making Delicate Mechanism of Telephones.

CHICAGO, Oct. 28.—Deaf-mutes, their infirmity proving a help instead of a hindrance, have demonstrated that there is one kind of skilled work in which they far excel the ordinary artisan. A Chicago telephone factory, after a series of experiments, made the discovery.

It was found that to the making of the delicate mechanism of the modern telephone the deaf-mute by reason of the mantal development incident to constant use of the sign language is peculiarly adapted. One hundred and fifty of the deaf-mutes, it is announced to-day, are now employed in the factory at standard wages.

$5,115 SHORTAGE IN RAHWAY.

Tax Receiver Reed Says He Will Be Able to Explain It.

RAHWAY, N. J., Oct. 28.—Charles E. Reed of this city, who was Receiver of Taxes for twelve years, said to-night that he would be able to explain apparent deficiencies in his accounts to the amount of $5,115.40, which were brought out by an audit of the books just completed.

In the change of the City Government from Republican to Democratic hands Mr. Reed was succeeded by John Bernhard. Some Councilman proposed that, as no special examination of the Tax Receiver's books had been made for years, they be looked into. The report was made to a special meeting of the Common Council last night. A resolution was passed directing City Attorney Dobbins to collect the deficiency from Mr. Reed or his bondsman. Mr. Reed is Secretary of the Union County Republican Committee.

KILLED FOUR AND HIMSELF.

Man Ambushed a Neighbor and Then Shot His Family.

GLOUCESTER, Va., Oct. 28.—When R. E. Gressett went out of his house in King and Queen County this morning about sunrise he was shot by W. D. Coker, who had been concealed under the high steps.

Gressett begged Coker not to shoot again, and Mrs. Gressett ran out and joined in the pleading. Coker went close to Gressett and killed him.

Coker sent word to officers to come to his home at Greenwood. As they drove up they heard a shot, and found Coker dead. He had killed his wife and two little girls.

No one knew of any ill-feeling Coker held against Gressett.

STORE OPENS TO-MORROW AT 8 A. M.

A $46,200 Stock of Oriental Rugs.
The Whole Magnificent Stock of E. T. Mason and Co. To-morrow for a Full Third Under the Regular Prices.

THE GREATEST SALE OF ORIENTAL RUGS EVER HELD IN BROOKLYN WILL START HERE TO-MORROW MORNING. This store is widely famous for the selling of Oriental Rugs. Probably in no other one store in the country are so many and so fine Rugs sold. And so it was natural that when the fine and famous old house of E. T. Mason & Co. of 7 East 17th Street, Manhattan, decided to give up the Oriental Rug business their stock should first be submitted to us.

The Mason house have for many years been great importers of Oriental Silks and Rugs, and now the silk business has grown so great as to demand all their attention and the Rug end of the business is to be terminated.

We bought the entire stock—OVER FORTY-SIX THOUSAND DOLLARS' WORTH—of splendid Rugs, and they will all be here to-morrow for a full third under the regular prices.

It is a magnificent collection. The Rugs are beautiful and perfect and in the popular sizes. The stock is especially rich in the Shirvan and Kazak Rugs, which above all others are favored by the good taste of Brooklyn people. There are Oriental Carpets, too, in the sale—a splendid stock of them.

Remember that this is not a sale of odds and ends, but a choice, full, splendid stock as fine as anything that could be bought to sell for full prices, and to be bought now for just about what it would cost to land them in this country.

The Entire Journeay and Burnham Stock of China and Housefurnishings Here To-morrow at a Third to Half Under Regular Prices

TO-DAY WE PRESENT THE NEWS of the most extraordinary offering of China and Housefurnishings ever made anywhere. It is news that will stir the interest of every Brooklyn woman; that will make a sensation wherever it is read.

There is no need to speak to Brooklyn people of the character of the Journeay and Burnham Store. For many years it has stood for the best in retail merchandising. For many years Brooklyn's most discriminating people have been its clientele.

But the Journeay and Burnham name was built on the selling of Dry Goods and kindred merchandise, and now its management have deemed it wise to continue along those lines and to give up entirely the departments for the selling of China, Cut Glass, Housefurnishings and the like.

The entire Journeay and Burnham stocks of China, Cut Glass and Housefurnishings came to us because through this store and to a Brooklyn public who know the fine character of the goods the promptest distribution is assured. They came to us also because their owners felt that by the Loeser Store the transaction would be conducted in the straightforward and dignified manner which the house of Journeay and Burnham would approve and which the character of the occasion deserves.

To this Journeay and Burnham stock we have added new and immense purchases from other sources and to-morrow the sale will start, presenting Over $50 000 Worth of Splendid Goods Under Price.

The sale begins to-morrow morning at eight o'clock sharp. It will continue over as many days as the goods last.

A WEEK OF SWIMMING PART OF N. Y. A. C. PLAN

Local and United States Championships to be Decided.

FASTEST AMATEURS TO RACE

Winter Sport Will Begin Nov. 11 and End with Metropolitan Event In March.

With a swimming tank and surroundings unsurpassed by any club in the country, the New York Athletic Club is planning to make the coming indoor season the most interesting and successful in the history of the sport, and preparations are under way to bring all the best swimmers together at the city clubhouse, Sixth Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street, during the Winter. With the holding of the United States indoor championships, which will occupy a week; the Metropolitan District and water polo championships, and the presence of every amateur swimmer of note in the country, it is almost assured that new records will be made for 1906 that will stand for a long time to come.

Five tournaments have been scheduled, the first one to be held on the night of Nov. 11. The feature of the second meet, which occurs on Dec. 9, will be a 100-yard handicap for the Bratton Memorial Cup. Another interesting feature of the handicap will be that it will probably decide the winner of the cup offered by William G. Bratton to the swimmer making the fastest time in a 100-yard race during 1905 in the Metropolitan District.

On Jan. 13 the third meeting will be held, and from Feb. 19 to Feb. 25, inclusive, the races for the United States indoor championships will be decided. The programme of the week's sport will include A. A. U. championships at 50, 100, 220, 440, and 880 yards and at one mile; back stroke race for 100 yards, championship; breast stroke race, 100 yards, championship; plunge for distance, championship; relay, five men to each team, championship; fancy diving championship, and water polo championship. In conjunction the intercollegiate water polo and relay championships will be held during the first part of the week. Teams from Yale, Columbia, Pennsylvania, and Brown, with Harvard as a possibility, will compete, and doubtless the winning college team will enter the water polo championship for the A. A. U., in which will be entered, besides the Olympic championship team of the N. Y. A. C., that of the Missouri A. C., Chicago A. A., Milwaukee A. C., Illinois A. C., Brookline Swimming Club, and possibly the team of the Pittsburg Athletic Club.

The fastest swimmers will take part in the individual championships. J. Scott Leary and Francis Gayley will be here from San Francisco, which will be their first appearance in a contest in the East. The Missouri Athletic Club of St. Louis will be represented by Marquand Schwarts, who won the A. A. U. National outdoor championship at one hundred yards. Another contestant will be M. J. Handy from the Central Y. M. C. A. of Chicago. This seventeen-year-old boy became quite popular with New Yorkers by his plucky and speedy exhibition in the Travers Island championships. Other famous swimmers who will compete will be Harry Le Moyne, who holds the American record for one hundred yards; L. J. Goodwin, the N. Y. A. C.'s noted "crawl" swimmer, and C. M. Daniels, America's champion at 100, 220, and 880 yards, and one mile, who has shown so much improvement of late that he is likely to beat all his previous records.

Among the contestants in the diving championship will be Dr. George B. Sheldon, the title holder for both America and the world; J. Hector Dewees of Toronto, the Canadian champion; D. H. Hammond of the Illinois Athletic Club of Chicago, besides Walter Lee, T. O'Callaghan, and a number of the best local divers.

It is the purpose of the Swimming Committee to schedule several championships each night, with probably two polo games, and efforts will be made to double the seating capacity of the natatorium so as give all present a good view of the contests.

The season will wind up in March with the Metropolitan swimming and water polo championships. The latter will be of exceptional interest this year, for, with the recent admission of Connecticut to the Metropolitan District, Yale will be represented for the first time and contend with teams of Columbia and the New York Athletic Club for the championship.

SYRIAN BISHOP ON TRIAL.

Hawaweeny and Fourteen Followers Plead Not Guilty of Conspiracy.

Hearing that warrants for their arrest on a charge of conspiracy were out, Bishop Raphael Hawaweeny and fourteen of his adherents of the Orthodox Syrian-Greek Church went in a body to Brooklyn Police Headquarters yesterday and surrendered to Inspector Cross. Under a strong guard of detectives, for fear of attack by the Bishop's enemies, the Syrians were taken to the Butler Street Court, accompanied by counsel. All pleaded not guilty and were paroled until Nov. 10.

The complaints rest on an affidavit by a man who alleges that he attended a meeting at the Bishop's headquarters, in Pacific Street, last August, at which threats were made against the lives of Najeeb M. Maloof and Nahoum Mokarzel, leaders of the opposition.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Silk Ribbons Having Draw Strings Are Not Trimmings—Other Decisions.

In a decision by I. F. Fischer, the Board of United States General Appraisers sustained yesterday a claim filed by Kern, Loewi & Mendel of New York, relative to the customs classification of silk ribbons having draw strings interwoven. The merchandise consists of narrow woven fabrics of silk gauze with silk strings which, when pulled, draws the ribbons into a ruffled condition. Collector Stranahan deemed the articles "trimmings," and assessed duty at the rate of 60 per cent. ad valorem. The importers maintained that, notwithstanding the draw string, the fabrics come within the meaning of the provision for manufactures of silk, at the rate of 50 per cent. The board orders the Collector to reliquidate the entries in accordance with the finding of the tribunal.

General Appraiser Sharretts wrote a decision for the board sustaining claims made by R. H. Macy & Co., of New York, concerning the classification of umbrella handles set with imitation precious stones. In the opinion of the Collector, the handles were "jewelry," and were assessed at the rate of 60 per cent. The board holds that the articles are intended for purposes of utility, and are not intended to be worn. It is therefore held that the importers' claim for duty as manufactures of metal at 45 per cent. is well taken.

Other importers' claims sustained were those of the American Express Company, A. & L. Metzger, C. E. Simcox, A. Strauss & Co., Wagner Brothers & Co., New York.

The board overruled protests filed by Hensel, Bruckmann & Lorbacher, G. W. Sheldon & Co., Middleton & Co., Cornelius Kaklen, A. Strauss & Co., the David Spero Company, Kaufmann, Aaron & Warshauer, and F. A. O. Schwarz, New York.

SAVOY HOTEL

LONDON.

In May, 1904, the extensions and improvements to the Savoy Hotel were completed.

Never in the history of hotel life in any country has the appreciation of the public of the comfort and luxury provided for them been shown in a more substantial form. The best travellers from the Continent of Europe and America have pronounced the magnificent suites of rooms with bathrooms to be unrivalled—and their recommendation to friends has resulted in the large increase in business of 1904 over 1903 being greatly exceeded in the present year—thus showing that the more the public become familiar with the comforts and luxury of the hotel the greater is its popularity. The following figures show the increase in business during the London season:

MONTH.	Increase of Receipts of Hotel and Restaurant in 1904 over 1903.	Increase of Receipts of Hotel and Restaurant in 1905 over 1903.	Occupants of Apartments during month. 1903.	1904.	1905.
MAY	35 per cent.	69 per cent.	4,428	4,478	8,074
JUNE	49 " "	85 " "	4,695	6,033	10,131
JULY	50 " "	108 " "	2,779	5,921	9,681

18,807 more visitors patronized the Savoy Restaurant in May, June and July, 1905, than in the same months of 1903—and during the season space alone has prevented the entertainment of a greater number of guests who have desired to enjoy the finest cuisine in the world.

HENRY PRUGER, General Manager.

BETTORS SCOOP UP CASH AS POLICE SMASH DOORS

Klondike Game Banker Arrested, Mourning Loss.

BIG PHYSICAL CULTURE CLASS

Capt. Daly Finds 138 Crowded in a Broadway "Studio"—Says Spotters Counted 443 One Evening.

While Capt. Daly of the West Forty-seventh Street Police Station was battering in the doors of an alleged poolroom and gambling house in Broadway, near Fiftieth Street, yesterday afternoon, to the accompaniment of cheers from a crowd which filled the streets, the players inside were busy gathering the bankroll of what some one explained to the police was "the Klondike game." The man in charge was so crestfallen when the raiders finally effected an entrance that he made not the slightest attempt to deny his identity.

"These poolroom pikers are a lot of grafters," he told Capt. Daly at the station house. "As soon as they got wise to what was going on they swiped all the money on the board."

"You've been swiping their money, haven't you?" asked the Captain.

"That's different," the Klondike man said. "I didn't collect until I won."

The alleged poolroom has been doing business for months over the blacksmith's ship of Meleff Brothers, 1,626 Broadway. Its promoters got an injunction before Capt. Daly took the Twenty-second Precinct restraining the police from interfering with them. The place was reached from a door on the sidewalk, above which was the sign:

Physical Culture Studio.
Private Instruction.

Capt. Daly determined to act despite the injunction. He provided two citizens, John Cummings and James Brown, with a bank roll, and rented a room directly across the street, where he established a lookout.

"It was the busiest physical culture studio you ever saw," said the Captain after the raid. "One evening my man counted 443 culturists who went up stairs. It was hard for Cummings and Brown, even with their innocent appearance, to get inside. When they did they bet on the races without trouble, and even took a whirl at Klondike. They didn't beat either game.

"This morning I got a warrant from the West Side Court, which made the raid possible, and at 4 o'clock I broke in with ten officers. The place upstairs was packed. There was a stampede when we showed ourselves, but it didn't last long. We took the names of 138 persons in the room and arrested the five men who were behind the poolroom and the Klondike game.

"They burned up a lot of stuff while we were chopping our way in, but we got some of the racing sheets, the Klondike paraphernalia, and about seven dozen packs of cards with a lot of poker chips."

The five prisoners gave the names Alexander Brown, Virgil Hixon, Joseph Regan, Alfred Benson, and Frank Morris. Brown had $745 in bills and a check for $35, drawn by Solomon & Sons in favor of David S. Solomon. He also had two theatre tickets.

"I was going to the show with a friend," he said. "Gimme them back."

"You won't need 'em," said the doorman, as he led the way to a cell.

To the name of Alfred Benson the police tacked on the alias Bensinger, and said that he had been convicted as a gambler before. A prizefighter, Sam Kelly, the police say, was interested in the "physical culture studio."

OLD GUARD FUSS STILL ON.

Private O'Neill Replies by Circular to Commandant Briggs.

James O'Neill, the Broadway lawyer, who leads the opposition to the re-election of Major S. Ellis Briggs as commander of the Old Guard, has issued a circular explaining his reasons for going to court with his case. Major Briggs issued a general order declaring that Private O'Neill and several other members of the Old Guard had failed to parade, and consequently would be relegated to the associate membership list. Associate members cannot vote nor can they parade on state occasions.

Mr. O'Neill got a writ from the Supreme Court prohibiting Major Briggs from preventing him from parading on Yorktown day. The order is returnable on Nov. 2. In his circular Private O'Neill says:

"Of late years, and especially during the present administration, the military organization (Old Guard) has gradually encroached upon the civil and social organization until the latter has been practically obliterated with unfortunate results that need not be dwelt upon. The most astonishing feature is the gradual assumption of complete autocratic control of the funds and business of the civil corporation by the Board of Officers, who graciously advise us at each meeting, 'for your information only,' of the paternal disposition they have made of our affairs and property. The climax is reached in the recent acts of the Commandant. The obvious remedy is a restoration of the old régime. It is an insult to the intelligence of the members to hold that they cannot manage the affairs of the organization, as has been done in the past, without the pains and penalties of military law."

Then, referring to the circular which he received from the officers of the Old Guard, he says:

"To address members of the Old Guard as kickers, malcontents, ringleaders, &c., is not calculated to change their views, stimulate their amiability, or produce harmony."

THE ELY SCHOOL TO MOVE.

Property in Riverside Drive Sold for Building Purposes.

The property on Riverside Drive between Eighty-fifth and Eighty-sixth Street which for several years has been occupied by the Misses Ely's school, has been sold by R. Fulton Cutting and W. Bayard Cutting to the City Investing Company, through Broker Barton Chapin. The consideration in the deal has not been made public, but it is said that the property has been held at $700,000.

The City Investing Company has already resold, through the same broker, the northerly half of the plot, fronting 100 feet on Riverside Drive and 204 feet on Eighty-sixth Street. The buyer is a builder, who will erect a twelve-story apartment house on the site. Under the terms of its contract the City Investing Company will not get possession of the property until July 1, 1906. In the meantime it is highly probable that some further disposition will be made of the Eighty-fifth Street corner, so that new building operations on both parts of the plot are likely to be carried on simultaneously.

This block front, measuring 200 by 204 feet, is sold without restrictions as to the class of buildings to be erected—in fact, it is practically the only remaining vacant parcel anywhere on the lower part of Riverside Drive the use of which is not limited to private dwellings.

R. Fulton Cutting and W. Bayard Cutting bought the property in 1891. It has been occupied practically ever since by the Misses Ely's school, for the accommodation of which a large addition to the old dwelling on the plot was built. The lease on the property expires at the end of the current school year, after which the Misses Ely's establishment will be moved to Greenwich, Conn., where a new building for the school is now going up.

THE CABLE CHESS MATCH.

Emperor William Has Been Asked to Give His Portrait as a Trophy.

Negotiations between the Manhattan Chess Club and the Berlin Chess Club for the match by cable, scheduled for Nov. 11 and 12, have been concluded, and it remains for the organizations to name the players. The Manhattan Club has selected five of its six players. They are G. H. Koehler, J. Finn, H. M. Phillips, E. Hymes, and H. Davidson.

The New York sextet will be stationed in the library of the Manhattan Chess Club, in Carnegie Hall, and the moves of the six games will be reproduced on large boards for the benefit of spectators.

A letter was received yesterday from the German Embassy at Washington, in which Baron von der Bussche informed the club that he had communicated with the Government at Berlin requesting that Emperor William be asked for his portrait and autograph as a trophy to go to the winner of the match.

DYING MAN SHIELDS FOE.

Wounded in Two Affrays Over Woman, Refuses to Identify Assailant.

Ramijio was captured by Policeman Reichard of the Mulberry Street Station after a chase of about a block. Cavaldo was taken to St. Vincent's Hospital. The surgeons say he cannot recover.

The dying man steadfastly refused to identify Ramijio as his assailant when the prisoner was taken to the hospital. Two weeks ago, the police say, Ramijio wounded Cavaldo in the right arm, and at that time would not identify his assailant or make any complaint.

PECKHAM AND HAAS FREE.

Released on a Legal Technicality in the Cotton Leak Case.

An important Federal decision was handed down yesterday by United States Commissioner James Ridgeway, in the case of Frederick A. Peckham and Moses Haas, who were indicted together with Edwin S. Holmes, Jr., on a charge of defrauding the Government in connection with the so-called cotton leak scandals. The men were arrested in this district, and an application was made to Commissioner Ridgeway for a warrant of removal, which by his opinion he declines to grant. The two men were then, upon motion of Lawyer Mark Alter, discharged from custody.

It was in this case that Attorneys Joel M. Marx and Hugh Gordon Miller, in their arguments in behalf of the accused men, quoted a part of the President's letter of acceptance. The precedent cited was that part of President Roosevelt's letter of acceptance in which he said there was no common law of the United States that could give jurisdiction of an offense to a Federal Court. Upholding this, Commissioner Ridgeway discharged Haas and Peckham.

In his opinion Commissioner Ridgeway reviews the duties of Statistician Holmes in connection with the cotton crop report and the further fact that the indictment charges Holmes with "official misconduct." The latter, he says, is an offense at common law in the District of Columbia, and is in no way mentioned as an offense in the Federal Statutes. He holds that it would be impossible for the accused men to conspire with Holmes to commit a crime not recognized by Federal law.

It is said that it is not improbable that the effect of Commissioner Ridgeway's decision in Washington will be to effect the ultimate discharge of former Statistician Holmes from the same indictment.

THE 8-HOUR AMENDMENT.

Labor Union Voters Urged to Support the Proposed Change.

The Board of Delegates of the Building Trades has sent out a circular to all labor unions in the city, urging their members to vote for State Constitutional Amendment No. 4. The amendment requires that an eight-hour workday be made imperative on all State and municipal public works. The circular says:

"The amendment, if carried by the voters and adopted by the State Legislature, will re-enact the labor laws which have been declared unconstitutional by the Court of Appeals and the Supreme Court, notably the prevailing rate of wages law and the eight-hour law—both applying to labor on public works. The amendment will also, if adopted, prevent the courts in the future from declaring labor legislation unconstitutional."

Woman Dies in a Pullman Car.

Word was received here yesterday of the death on an east-bound Lake Shore train at Buffalo of Mrs. Lottie Rosenthal, 75 years old, of 325 East Eighty-fourth Street. Mrs. Rosenthal was found dead in a Pullman berth. Heart disease is supposed to have caused her death. She had been on a visit to relatives in Denver.

Claire Heliot---Most Daring of Lion Tamers

Of Which One of Her Fourteen Pets Will She Be the Victim?

CLAIRE HELIOT
Sentimentalist and Lion-tamer

Auguste Is the Only One of Which This Frail but Fearless Little Woman Has Any Misgivings--Her Exhibition of Trained Lions One of the Most Thrilling Animal Acts Ever Seen.

KIPLING has said that sentimentality is the most beasty of instincts.

Claire Heliot confesses that she has tamed her lions with sentimentality.

This will not prevent them from killing her, but it makes her professional success as a lion tamer possible.

It will prolong it, also.

She believes there is something else in a lion besides an ideal for raw meat.

"They would not have the heart to kill me," she says confidently.

But it is hard to believe.

Still, when you see Claire Heliot in her lion's cage at the Hippodrome tickle the nose of her huge Senegal lion with a whip that he could swallow like a caviar sandwich, you fall back upon a diluted wisdom labeled skepticism.

Then you say to yourself the lions are drugged, or they are doing tricks just as trick lions should, or they are tamed lions that any one could pull by the tail or kick under the kitchen table if they were in the way. She pats them on the head like ponies, hugs them like kittens, romps about with them as no mere woman could possibly do if they were not as safe as house cats'

You think so?

Any lady unwise enough to think she might understudy Mme. Heliot can have the opportunity any afternoon or evening at the Hippodrome, or any man or any number of them together, in family parties or sight-seeing groups.

The tame lions will be there, fourteen of them, to establish the theory that they are harmless performing beasts. Any person in the audience desiring to enter the cage and pinch their tails may do so after signing away all future claims made by their heirs against Thompson & Dundy.

There is no such thing as a tame lion.

Wrapped in its tawny skin is all that is wild in nature—violence, rage, fearlessness, hatred, power, a wicked shrewdness, the impenetrable expression of a sphinx, and the instinct of murder.

In the sense of all that is beastly, he is the King of Beasts.

Artists give him a plastic nobility, and poets have enchained him in a grandeur of Oriental obedience, but he is a cat, and if you don't watch him with microscopic attention, look out!

If you chloroform a lion he won't be fit to be seen. There is no drug that will stupify the instincts of his nature and make him adaptable for parlor entertainments.

Awake or asleep, he lives for one ideal—raw meat.

He has no virtues that are without passion, no loyalty that is not spoiled by treachery, no ambition that is not devilish, no vanity except to capture higger prey than his neighbors. His "majestic stride" is the creep of a big cat, and his leonine head is full of busy mischief.

There are fixed reasons that have made the lion tamer our modern hero. Except that he has always misrepresented his dangers with pardonable vanity by an appearance of brute force against brute force he is morally a hero. When the lion roars your professional lion tamer stands over him and cracks his whip till he stops roaring.

If the lion really wanted to chew him up, however, he could.

It is not the bravery of the lion tamer that prevents this; it is the laziness of the lion, a dormant indifference, an ambitionless strength, and a lack of self-confident power ordinarily.

A lion thoroughly enraged, however, stops at nothing; goes straight up to a lion tamer, even, and on him with savage assurance.

There is nothing cowardly about a lion.

A few lion tamers more or less mean nothing to an angry lion. He will kill if he has a mind to, and cares not if he be killed for it. Men and women who train wild beasts never trust them to think for themselves; they think for them, with them, of them, but never give them their freedom of instinct—if they can help it.

If some day the wild beast breaks this bondage of human superiority and discovers that the trainer is shamming a strength he does not feel—it is a tap of one great paw on the the shoulder that rips off an arm, and the brute is master.

Claire Heliot says that lions are far more intelligent than horses; that she tells them once only what to do and they never forget it; that they never forget an injury, and are susceptible to kindness, unless they are in a bad temper, which is quite often, and then she has to be "very careful."

That is putting it mildly.

But then, Claire Heliot is as mild and gentle as a woman can be, and in the amazing contrast of her nature to any semblance of a brute instinct is the phenomenon, the new problem she presents as a lion tamer. Doubtless all courage in supreme tests is a species of self-hypnosis. We refuse to be afraid, we trust to an avatar of luck, and we survive—because the sands of destiny are not run out.

Now, Claire Heliot believes, really believes, that not one of her fourteen lions would have the heart to kill her.

She does not deny that they could, but she refuses to believe that they would.

When they scratch her neck, her arms, her hands, she says, "it is in play; in play they bite me sometimes; but that is all; they want to play."

When they throw their ears back and snarl and reach out for her in lightning swiftness with one paw she coquettes with them. Coquetry must be a remote possibility to a lion, but Claire Heliot relies upon his appreciation of it, nevertheless.

Bernard Shaw would be delighted with Claire Heliot, for she is literally a timid sentimentalist, and when she enters the lions' cage with a brisk air of bravado and strength her attitude toward those lions is that of a separate sentimental devotion to each of them.

She would not hurt one of them with a pin, and if one of those lions has a pimple she is as considerate of the beast as if he knew it.

I don't believe the lions half appreciate this little woman's adoration, not to the extent that they would have any delicacy about biting her head off in a moment of anger, but it is a beautiful psychology that Claire Heliot suggests. It is literally a solving of the mysteries of the Garden of Eden, where Eve was the first amateur lion tamer.

"SHE TAMES WITH SENTIMENT"

"THEY DO NOT FEAR THE WHIP"

"HE HAS NOT THE HEART TO KILL"

Claire Heliot's grandfather was a Protestant minister, her father held a responsible Government position in Leipsic; but all her kith and kin have left her alone in the world, with her lions. Her days are devoted to them; her nights are often sleepless because of them.

Somebody told her before she left Europe that New York was a very wicked place, and she is more afraid of burglars and bad men than she is of her lions. She sleeps with the lights burning all night in her apartments, because she is afraid of darker New York, she told me. When she goes to her bank in Broad Street she is in a state of nervous fear that somebody may direct her the wrong way. Inconceivable it was to hear her make these unwilling confessions of excessive timidity, an hour or so before she was to enter a cage alone with fourteen lions.

Being intrinsically, not artificially, feminine, she could not control the beasts by brute force.

She governs them as the best of women govern the human brute, by trusting them blindly. She carries no concealed weapons; her two attendants outside the cage do not either.

"What is the use?" she says. "Before I could shoot I would be killed."

"And the dogs, those Great Danes, wouldn't they attack the lions?"

"No, no," and she smiles a little sadly prophetic smile. "They are afraid the lions will scratch them, as it is."

The merest accidental scratch of a lion's claw leaves a scar two or three inches long and digs deep for blood. I saw several on Claire Heliot's arms and neck.

Frequently they bite her; once they chewed her wrist and bit into the jugular vein so that the blood spurted in a stream two feet across the cage and her white satin dress was covered with deep red stains. She twisted a handkerchief tightly round the wound, drove the lions into their cages, and waited in her dressing room for a doctor, because there is always danger of blood poisoning from the bite of a wild beast.

Auguste did this, the bad lion, the largest one, who sits near the big door of the cage.

"I must be careful with Auguste; he has a bad temper. I must be very careful with that lion," she said in her soft voice, with a serious light of indescribable fatality in her clear blue eyes.

"Would he kill you?" I asked.

"Oh, no, I think not," and she gives a little shiver and her eyes wander about the room helplessly; "but he is a bad lion. I am very careful with him."

"This afternoon you had trouble with him."

"It is only when he is before the public that he defies me. It seems as though he realizes that he must make a noise, make a show of himself. When I rehearse him in the morning he is the most obedient of them all, the most kind."

"He is waiting for a chance; it is the instinct of the cat," I suggested.

"No. I know the character of each one of my lions. I can see the moment they come into the cage if they are in bad temper. Then, if one is very bad, I drive him out of the ring at once. Sometimes my man comes in with the whip, too. A lion is more afraid of two people than one. Once he came straight for me, so quick that I was helpless; but I did not give ground. I cracked my whip, and the man came in and helped me drive him in. But it was my fault. I was angry with him, and the lion knew it. So long as I am always kind they will be kind too."

"Are they afraid of the whip?"

"I could not hurt them, even if I wished to, with it."

"Why are they afraid?"

"Why is the elephant afraid? Because he does not know his power. A Divine order of things has given his soul into the keeping of man. Only when man abuses his trust does the wild beast show his strength and kill. I suppose the lion is afraid of a human being by instinct; but once let him know his power and he kills. If during my performances I lost heart, or became indifferent, or relaxed for a moment any attention on them, they would have me down. I never think of the public; I never see them when I am in the cage."

"Is the steel rod you carry heavy enough to hurt a lion?"

"I have not strength enough to hurt any of them. Sometimes, when they are bad, they claw at the whip and can snatch it from me, because it is leather, but a steel rod slips through their claws—they cannot get hold of it."

I saw the steel rod. It was hollow, light, with a rounded end. There was nothing about it to hurt a poodle.

If any other human being touched one of Claire Heliot's lions he would be assured that they were wild beasts. Even her two attendants, who have been with her eight years, ever since she first appeared in public with the lions, dare not touch them.

After the performance at night, before she removes her stage dress, she spends an hour and a half feeding them, washing them, bathing any sore places on their bodies.

They eat 120 pounds of raw meat daily. On Sunday they fast.

These are the mere menagerie details; the interesting revelation that Claire Heliot proves is that she

The Call of the Ice-Locked North

Perils, Sufferings, and Impressions of Members of the Ziegler-Fiala Expedition in the Great White Arctic Solitudes--Failure of the Venture Attributed to Lack of Harmony.

THAT the north polar expedition on the America, financed by the late William Ziegler, headed by Anthony Fiala and rescued by William S. Champ, Mr. Ziegler's private secretary, reached no further north than 82 degrees 13 minutes was due to lack of harmony among the officers, according to members of the expedition who are only now straggling home from Bergen, Norway, whers the ship's company disbanded.

Just what the trouble was—whether occasioned by petty jealousies, disaffection, or refusal of some of the heads of the expedition to venture further—these tardy stragglers refuse to divulge on the plea that they are bound to secrecy, though they are willing to talk freely of the perils and adventures of the voyage.

That the trouble was serious, however, is demonstrated by the manner in which a large sum of money bountifully set aside by Mr. Ziegler for distribution as rewards among deserving members of the expedition was apportioned by Mr. Fiala when all hands were safely aboard the relief ship Terra Nova.

It would appear that this bonus was entirely unexpected by everybody, and that Mr. Ziegler had provided that the money was to be allotted in proportion to the loyalty manifested and the value of services rendered by individual members, whether officers or men, at the sole discretion of Mr. Fiala. As a result some of the men got considerably more than some of the officers, a fact which did not increase the cordiality of the relations between the head of the expedition and his disgruntled assistants.

Announcement of the bounty fund was made one day by Mr. Fiala when the Terra Nova was speeding south from Franz Josef's Land toward civilization. Mr. Fiala had his entire company assembled, and, with Mr. Champ standing beside him, delivered a speech in which he expressed his thanks and gratitude to all his companions who had stood loyally by him in the hour of general peril and need, and then, to the astonishment of all and the intense satisfaction of the majority, told of Mr. Ziegler's generosity and the conditions under which the fund was to be apportioned.

The America started from New York on May 16, 1903, and in October of the same year made fast to the shore ice in Tiplitz Bay, Crown Prince Rudolph Island, about a mile from the coast.

The vessel went no further, though why not the members of the crew were puzzled to understand, for they say the sea was clear as far as it could be scanned through a telescope when the America arrived. A most graphic account of the destruction of the ship was given by one of them. In substance, his story was as follows:

"We had taken with us 30 horses and 250 dogs, but had gone into partial Winter quarters, and the horses and 175 dogs were ashore, the remaining 75 canines being loose aboard the ship. The three months' period of darkness had set in, and the ice was drifting slowly.

"The watch was kept by a single member of the crew, there being, of course, no necessity for more than one man, and he was relieved every hour on account of the intense cold. We all slept in furs, or under furs in our heavy woolen underwear.

"On the night of Jan. 2, 1904, when we lost the ship, I, who ordinarily sleep as one dead, was unable to get more than fitful slumber. I was unable to account for it. A strange uneasiness oppressed me. About every unpleasant event that had occurred to me from childhood on passed through my mind—foolish situations and things said and done that one recalls only with a feeling of shame or vexation, and only when one is wrestling with one's thoughts in solitude and sleeplessness. Even the heavy breathing of my shipmates irritated me. A strong offshors wind had begun to blow and was driving in the ice, which was breaking up.

"It was about 4 o'clock in the morning when I heard a peculiar crackling, crunching sound that every instant became louder and nearer. Then came a shout of terror from the watch.

"'Turn out, everybody! Run for your lives! The ice is upon us!'

"There was no need for his warning, for the sound had increased to a roar, and the ship's sides were cracking and crashing under the pressure of the main floe that the wind had driven in and was piling up mountainwise on the surrounding ice and over the ship itself from the port side. Through the smashing timbers came ice and water, too, putting out the boiler fires and cutting off the electric light.

"It was every man for himself. Most of us were cursing or shouting or yelling, and the dogs were barking and yelping as we scrambled about in the darkness, frantic with dread of the unseeable danger that had come thus suddenly and noisily upon us, and believing that a dreadful death was our certain and immediate portion.

"It is a curious fact that I had heard, and indeed had had opportunity of noting before, that men in dire peril have a tendency to curse rather than to pray. This did not strike me at the time, of course, but I had ample opportunity to think about it later when I was doubtful whether or not I ought to be thankful that I escaped.

"The ice mountain was falling about me when I reached the deck. A dog rushed against my legs, nearly upsetting me as I stumbled through the blackness to the starboard side and dropped overboard on to the ice.

"My one idea was to get as far as possible from the ship and on to terra firma. I had not a doubt that the ice was breaking up all about me, and I groped my way cautiously but as rapidly as I could over the jagged surface and among the hummocks.

"I did not know which way I was going, but was trying to keep a straight line from the ship's starboard side, which lay parallel with the shore of the island. Then the fear came upon me that I might be going in a circle back toward the floes. In the distance I could hear the shouts of other men and recognized the voice of Mr. Fiala. This reassured me somewhat, and, shouting also, I made my way in their direction, groping, however, with the same caution. Fortunately there was no snowfall. The storm was merely one of wind.

"At last the myriad colored light-waves of the aurora borealis suddenly undulated across the firmament, and I was able to distinguish objects at a distance of 150 yards. This dim crepuscle is the nearest approach to daylight one ever gets in those latitudes during the dark season, but its effect in restoring our courage was wonderful. The average man can face with nerve a peril he can see; but to be sightless in an upheaval of ice floes, hearing yet unable to discern what is going on about him, hardly daring to move lest he step to death in the watery abysm beneath his very feet, and exposed, improperly clad, to a wind from the ninth circle of the Inferno that freezes the blood—such conditions make a coward of the strongest, and there is no denying that every one of us was sick with terror that night.

"The Northern Lights enabled us speedily to get together and Mr. Fiala, in whom all the crew had confidence, took direction. A count of noses showed that all the thirty-nine members of the expedition were safe, and then attention was turned to the ship.

"It was found that the America was still in the ice, which, having piled about and upon her to a height of twenty feet above the deck, had remained jammed like a rampart, the upheaval having ceased. We managed to get out some supplies, but about 40 tons of provisions and 100 tons of coal had to be left in the vessel. A few days later the America disappeared. She had joined in Davy Jones's fathomless locker the doomed squadron that in detail had been vanquished and gone down before the Frost King's invincible might.

"We set about making ourselves as comfortable as the circumstances would permit, and built near the shelters of the dogs and horses quarters made of provision and biscuit boxes and blocks of ice packed tightly round with snow.

"Our canned provisions consisted of bully beef, beefsteak, mutton, veal, desiccated eggs, peas, beans, tomatoes, and cabbage. This was varied by bear and walrus meat. Polar bear flesh has a fishy flavor, but is eatable, with the exception of the fat, which has a rancid taste unspeakably nauseating, and made us all ill. Walrus meat has a flavor of muskrat. Fried it is not so bad, though very tough. Stewed it is like leather, and cannot be masticated. In the Spring we got a few crowbilled ducks.

"During our stay on Crown Prince Rudolph Island three dashes north were made. On the first expedition, which set out on Feb. 12, there were thirty sleighs, each, with one exception, (one of the thirty horses having died,) drawn by a single horse and a team of ten dogs. It was on this trip that the limit of 82 degrees 13 minutes was reached. At this point there was a disagreement among the officers, and the party returned. It was announced that some of the men had become ill and were unable to proceed further.

"In the other two ventures for some reason the party did not get beyond latitude 82.10. No horses were taken on these last trips. It was given out that there was glanders among the animals, though I, for my part, would have been willing to take chances by eating of their flesh, as would a good many other men.

"One by one all the horses were shot. As castaways all the members of the expedition, high and low, had to do their share of tending the animals, and some of the officers didn't relish the work. It was less trouble to kill the horses than to feed and care for them, you know. In hunting bears we lost several dogs and we had to kill a number of our four-footed friends ourselves as food for the rest of the pack.

"We found some small depots of canned provisions left by the expedition commanded by the Duke of Abruzzi and the André relief expedition; but by August, 1904, notwithstanding that the strictest economy had been observed, we were down to an allowance of two pounds of hard bread per man per week, with any bear or walrus we could catch, and a little coffee which we had preserved preciously. The sugar, condensed milk, and all canned food had given out.

"At the end of August it was decided to make a move for Cape Flora, at the southernmost extremity of the Franz Josef archipelago, where it had been agreed that a relief ship should be sent in case of emergency. There we remained until August of this year, when the Terra Nova found us.

"I have heard that the monotony and loneliness of life in the vast land tracks of the West drives men and women mad. Once I imagined that this easily might be, but now I cannot understand it, for I have lived long months amid the abomination of a white desolation. On land in this, God's country, man in his solitude has the distraction of the ever-changing foliage and flowers with which nature in the seasons makes the earth beautiful. Then has he not for solace the infinite charm of woman's companionship?

"In the regions of eternal ice the castaway faces a dreary waste whose color never changes, from which there seems to be no issue and which appears to stretch to the rim of the world. It weighs with its awful chill and silence upon his heart and brain and grips his very soul. In this great silence his own voice and the voices of others sound strange. The ice cracks suddenly with a noise as of a cannon being fired, and startles every nerve. Nails in the wood of the hut and boxes start with a pistol-like report and frighten him from his sleep.

"Idleness demoralizes him. The whiteness blinds him. Here man does not love his fellows in misfortune. The sight of their faces grows hateful to him as the tension of his nerves increases. He becomes a selfish, morose animal, in whom all the brute instincts and lusts of his primeval forebears that through the ages have become subdued but not eradicated from human nature crop out and develop.

"Each individual is suspicious of the other, fearful, jealous lest he should get a larger share of the daily diminishing dole of ration. They are as snarling dogs over a bone. They watch each other with blurred, bloodshot eyes. For a nothing they would engage in a grapple to the death. Dominating every other craving is that for a square meal and something to smoke. This is stronger even than the yearning for home and the loved ones waiting there. Next is the longing for the sight of woman.

"The influence wielded by woman over a man who loves her and is subjected to her immediate seductiveness, tremendous, often absolute, though it be, is not greater perhaps than that of the dream woman over the man she entrances in the visions of enforced indolence and solitude such as was ours.

"Take from the common man the love of woman and the wherewithal to satisfy the appetite of his stomach, and what is left for him? Abandoned to his own devices, how long is it before the development occurs of that spirituality, the divinity of soul, that is presumed to be latent, at least, within every human being? How long before the spirit, unaided, triumphs over the flesh?

"At Cape Flora we lived in a hut built by the English explorer Jackson in 1900. It was a construction of logs that had been put together in Archangel and shipped in sections. There was little food in it, and this consisted chiefly of hard rye bread, a German product, that had been incased in thick zinc cans.

"Every Sunday morning at 10 o'clock each man received his two pounds of bread for the week, and saw to it that no one got a fraction of an ounce more. An equal distribution was always made also of any food that could be caught. All were on a footing of equality and nothing was done without consultation and a majority vote. A pint of whisky had been jealously treasured. It was agreed to confide it for strictly medicinal emergencies to Dr. Charles Sykes, the surgeon. Some of us would have liked to eat the dogs, but I am glad to say we refrained from this.

"With nothing to do, nothing to smoke, little to eat, and most of us suffering from snow blindness or else from the weary gloom of the arctic night, that for three months drags out its seconds as though time itself were tired, and every hour not passed in sleep is an aeon, it was natural that deep despondency should wait upon ennui and surliness. Among the entire company there was one book, a Bible. This I read from cover to cover no fewer than nine times.

"One member of the crew died—Zigard Merri, a Norwegian. That others did not also succumb probably is due to Anthony Fiala. I have said that as castaways all were on a footing of equality, but the men looked up to Mr. Fiala and idolized him. Cheerful and kind under all circumstances and very religious, he exercised an incalculable influence for good.

"Our chief amusements were hunting, boxing, and wrestling. In the long nights in the hut Mr. Fiala did his utmost to keep our spirits up. Taking the Bible, he would give most interesting talks about the periods dealt with in the chapter he happened to select, illustrating his meaning and description by clever sketches, for he is an artist. He also had an inexhaustible store of good stories, for he is also a raconteur who we felt in our gratitude could have few equals.

"Every Sunday divine service was held, at which he recited prayers by heart, for we had no prayer book.

"By the Fourth of July we were getting near the end of our tether, yet we did not forget to celebrate the day. It was not exactly a cheerful celebration. The vast, drear perspective of our prison, with its unvarying sameness, appeared even more desolate as we thought of the heat and sun-kissed farms and cities of the United States.

"We stuck the Stars and Stripes over the top of the house, and Mr. Fiala organized a game of baseball, which aroused quite a lot of excitement and stimulated our already too healthy appetites; but not a crumb of extra ration could we allow ourselves, for we were facing imminent starvation. The ball was made of deer hair from a fur. The bat consisted of a piece of a sleigh runner.

"One attempt was made to sing 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' but it was a dismal failure. We Americans looked at each other, choked—and it was all off.

"At the beginning of August our situation was desperate. We had only two weeks' rations left, counting at the rate of two pounds of bread per week for each man. A party was selected to make an attempt to secure relief if the assistance from home we were longing for did not reach us within a week.

"The day the Terra Nova hove in sight a fog had been hanging around the coast all morning. At noon, the mist having cleared, Francis Long of the Weather Bureau, went out to take his usual observations. In a little while he came back waving his arms, dancing and yelling like an Indian. We thought he had gone mad. He pointed to the horizon, and following the direction of his arm, we saw smoke. Then it was our turn to go crazy. In a little while a steamship was made out bearing toward us. We were saved.

"And every man went down on his knees and thanked his Maker.

"All our troubles, save one, were now over. This trouble was our dogs, of which we had about three score left. Of course we took them aboard the Terra Nova, but having them there, did not know what to do with them. We could not keep the animals. We tried to give them away to fishermen off the coast of Nova Zembla, but although they had cost 80 rubles apiece in Russia, the fishermen would not take them on account of the high duty and license.

"In the end we shot them and threw them overboard, with the exception of one that H. P. Hart, the chief engineer, had taken a fancy to and would not part with for anything. He took his pet to his home in Florida.

"The killing of those dogs was one of the most painful experiences of our adventure.

"Would I care to join another expedition to the polar seas?

"Yes; for now that for three months I have lived amid the bustle and turmoil of the cities and have looked upon the face of woman, the great white solitudes are calling to me, and were the opportunity to present itself I should have to answer the summons.

"You may not believe this, but it is true."

owes her safety among these lions to their appreciation of kindness.

"They would not kill me; they only scratch," she says, "and when they have bad temper, then I must be careful."

Why does she wear low-heeled shoes?

Because if she tripped and fell in that cage—well, it would annoy the lions, and an annoyed lion kills, if he thinks he can.

"A lion tamer once told me that if he killed a lion it made no difference, he could get another," she said. "That is brutal, dreadful. If any one hurts my lions, ah! I cannot bear it."

Was there ever such a reversal of tradition?

Sacha, (pronounced Sarshar,) the lion she carries out of the ring on her back, is ten years old. He is wise, good, affectionate, the kindest wild beast in the world, but he often scratches her or nips her playfully, and she accepts the bloodthirsty caress in the spirit that it is given.

Claire Heliot is the personification of a sentimental confidence, not in human nature, not in man or woman, but in her lions.

She enters the cage to the dare-devil music of "Carmen," but she is a little German Marguerite in spirit, in her devotion to and trust in her beasts.

Will they betray her?

Auguste is about as villainous a looking Mephisto as I ever saw, and who can say that the wooing sensibilities of Sacha are more faithful than the weak-kneed Faust?

They have drawn blood whenever they have had the opportunity, though she forgives them; if they love her at all it is for the raw meat she gives them, not for the sentiment she lavishes on them.

Although they fawn, and purr, and coax in their powerful way, they are soulless, they are born to kill—and she takes the chance day in and day out.

Auguste is a vicious brute. He has grown evil enough to sneer at the whip, to claw at the rod; he has dared to threaten her seriously.

"I must be very careful with that lion," she says, and some day he will become so bad that she cannot exhibit him.

Just when that will be she, of course, does not know.

She does not fear him, she does not hate him. She believes that he "would not kill"—but the devil is in all cats, and Auguste is the worst of his kind.

Another Royal Engagement Announced in Germany

Berlin, Oct. 12.

THE news of the engagement of Prince Eitel Friedrich, the second son of the Kaiser, and the Duchess Sophie Charlotte of Oldenburg has greatly pleased the people of Germany, for the relations between the two royal houses are now very friendly. The lovers became acquainted with each other at the time of the marriage of the German Crown Prince, when the Duchess was here with her parents and was the guest of her grandmother, the Princess Friedrich Karl of Prussia. A few weeks later the young people met again at Kiel, where their interest in yachting brought them together. Since then they have met frequently.

The gossip of Oldenburg for some time was that the young people would soon become engaged, but it was the intention not to make the fact known until the birthday of the Kaiserin. At the festivities at Gluecksburg, however, the engagement was announced, because Prince Eitel desired the fact to become known on the marriage day of his bosom friend, the young Duke of Coburg-Gotha.

Both Eitel Friedrich and the Duchess are extremely good looking. The Prince is a great Court favorite and is the favorite son of the Kaiser. In fact, it is said that he is much brighter than the Crown Prince. Eitel was an excellent student at Bonn, and he possesses an independent will and good judgment.

Duchess Sophie Charlotte, as her photograph indicates, possesses a very attractive face. She is said not to be particularly bright, but by her good heart and winning ways has endeared herself to the people of Oldenburg. Her father's first wife, a daughter of Prince Friedrich Carl, the famous Red Prince, died shortly after the Duchess, now 26 years old, was confirmed. Then, in 1897, the Duke married the Princess Elizabeth of Mecklenburg, who has borne him several children. The marriage is said to be a very happy one, and the relations between the Duchess and her step-mother are ideal, the two being more like sisters. Duchess Sophie Charlotte is an excellent musician and, unlike her future father-in-law, the Kaiser, loves Wagner. For many years she has lived a quiet life in the country, and is little known in Berlin, although she has been here on several occasions, as the guest of her uncle, Prince Friedrich Leopold, and of her grandmother.

Prince Eitel Friedrich. Granddduchess Sophie Charlotte.

The Kaiser is a great admirer of the Duchess, and has seen her frequently on his repeated visits to Oldenburg. He calls her affectionately "Lotta." It was at one time believed that the Duchess would marry the German Crown Prince, but a romantic love affair came between them. The Duchess fell madly in love with her father's Adjutant, a dashing young officer. Soon after the American papers announced that the officer had gone to America. But even greater was the surprise of the American journals when another correspondent and myself announced that the Duke of Oldenburg was on his way to America to seek the Adjutant. Since then the officer has returned to Europe, and his relations with the Duke and the young Duchess are very friendly. The Kaiser also at one time was at odds with the Duke of Oldenburg, but has won the friendship of the latter by supporting his claim to the succession of the Duchy, which the Czar had contested.

Both the young Duchsss Sophie Charlotte and Prince Eitel at one time were in delicate health. After her love affair with the Adjutant the Duchess spent many months in Kissingen, while her future husband was laid up with a dangerous case of pneumonia, from which he only recovered through the tender nursing of his mother, the Empress.

WHEN HIS TURN CAME.

THE story is told of an Irishman who bitterly resented the prejudice against his race that he believed constantly militated against him.

On one occasion, when he applied for a place on a sailing vessel, the Captain asked for a reference.

"A reference!" exclaimed the Irishman, "for a common sailor's job!"

But the Captain insisted, and the reference had to be obtained before he was engaged. When presently another applicant, an Englishman, was engaged for a similar place, but without demand for reference, naturally the Irishman was indignant. He was, of course, obliged to smother his anger, but he cherished his grudge both against the other sailor and the Captain.

One day the two sailors were at work near each other, each with a pail of soap suds scrubbing off the deck. The Englishman was resting his pail on the rail for an unguarded moment, when a sudden lurch of the vessel sent him overboard with his implements.

The Irishman arose shouting lustily; then recollecting himself he suppressed the "man overboard" that came to his lips.

As the Captain and others came running to see what the hubbub meant the Irishman waved his arms dramatically toward the unfortunate sailor struggling in the water.

"The Englishman that ye took without a riference, Sor," he said, "is gone off wid yer pail!"

Under the Knife.

Mrs. Jones—Mr. Sniffins told me he had a dangerous operation performed when he was at the hospital.

Mr. Jones—Yes, they cut out his booze.

VAGARIES OF PUBLIC CURIOSITY.

"IT is wonderful," said a commercial traveler, "how small a thing will attract the attention and interest of pedestrians on a crowded street, and on the other hand, how often an unusual happening will pass by unnoticed. I was on Seventh Avenue a few days ago when to my amazement I saw a troup of five elephants coming soberly and solemnly along the avenue. I looked for the small boy, but he was not there. Not a pedestrian turned his head that I could see, and the elephants went on their way unnoticed. I suppose they were being taken to some show."

Among the group who heard the commercial man's story was one of the largest advertising men in the country. "Some years ago," he said, "I went from Chicago to the South on a business trip. I visited all the leading Southern cities, but was not very successful, and returned to Chicago a disappointed and disgusted man. I put up at the Auditorium, my usual hotel, where I was well known. There were no friends there to greet me, and the place seemed too lonely to bear. I walkd about the city, but nothing of interest was going on. My mood changed, and I determinod to liven up the city a bit, if I could, but as events subsequently proved, I couldn't.

"I hired a band of musicians, put them in a coach, got in another coach myself, and followed. It seems to me that we drove all over Chicago that evening. The band played popular airs the whole time. I watched the populace from the windows of my coach, which immediately followed the coach containing the musicians, and do you know I never saw a pedestrian turn his head to find the cause of the rumpus? It was simply amazing, and I came to the conclusion that Chicagoans have no taste for the fine arts. After a couple of hours of this I returned to my hotel in disgust, my heart full of pity for the Windy City and its people.

"My little experiment cost me considerably over $200, but I think the money was well spent. I have since retired from the sport of attempting to attract popular attention by fool methods, and the field is open to the next man."

It sometimes happens that the early bird merely succeeds in scratching up the worms for the late risers.

It Will Be the World's Greatest Art Institution

Arrival of Sir Purdon Clarke Signifies a New Era in the History of the Metropolitan Museum---Wherein It Has the Advantage of the Great European Galleries--A Talk with Acting Director Story.

WHEN King Edward bade farewell to Sir Purdon Clarke last Tuesday he expressed the wish that he might see the Metropolitan Museum of Art after the plans of Sir Purdon, its new director, who arrives in this city this week to take up his duties here, have had time to be carried out. The wish involved a generous recognition of the capacity of the new Director to make the best of the important work that is placed in his hands, while it may also be taken as the royal tribute to the brilliant achievements of Sir Purdon as the head of Great Britain's chief art institution, the South Kensington Museum. Through the instrumentality of Sir Purdon the latter has become a great educational centre whose influence extends in various practical ways to the art schools throughout the British dominions. It is thus not a mere collection of paintings, statues, antiquities, &c., but, by means of the intelligent system introduced by its outgoing Director, it operates as an artistic and creative impulse, an educational force, in all the minor institutions of the kind that come under its influence. King Edward's tribute, therefore, implied the belief that a similar work would be undertaken by Sir Purdon as Director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Will that be possible? In art circles and reviews there has been considerable discussion as to the practical outcome of Sir Purdon Clarke's mission here, and students of the subject have wondered whether he would be able to make of the Metropolitan Museum an institution comparable in importance, or even similar in purpose, to the South Kensington. The latter, being a strictly Government institution, enjoys a prestige, undoubtedly, that lightens the task of making it the recognized art centre of Great Britain. From its official character its educational activities find channels that are not so readily opened to a museum controlled by a corporation that is not in any way a part of the Government. In New York the position of the Metropolitan Museum is undoubtedly of commanding importance in matters relating to art, but whether its educational influence can extend to the schools and museums of other cities is not an easy problem to solve in a country whose cities are disinclined to recognize the authority of one undisputed metropolitan centre. Art, however, may be trusted to carve out its own destiny in spite of sectional prejudice, and the adequate art collection, combined with intelligent, sympathetic management, is certain to exert a widespread influence wherever it may be housed—at least, so say those who take the optimistic view of the future of the Metropolitan Museum.

Simultaneously with the coming of Sir Purdon Clarke to undertake the Directorship of the Museum, it is interesting to note that the capacity of the latter is to be greatly enlarged by the addition of a north wing to the portion of the present building fronting on Fifth Avenue. Owing to the accumulation of material for which there is no space in the existing exhibition rooms, the need for this addition is urgent, and as soon as it is completed, two years hence, say the Museum authorities, it will be filled, and the erection of the south wing will then become necessary. With the completion of these two wings the Museum will have a frontage on Fifth Avenue extending from Eightieth to Eighty-fifth Street—over 1,000 feet. The Museum buildings will then form a little over a fourth part of the proposed edifice.

According to the plans made by the architect, the late Richard M. Hunt, the completed Museum will cover eight acres of ground, the buildings to form a hollow square, with the old structures inclosed in a grand court. The estimate of the total cost is $22,000,000. Mr. Hunt's plans were not made in detail and are being carried out only in a general way by subsequent architects, to whom the building of the different wings is awarded by the city, these awards being decided by competition. The architects, McKim, Mead & White, who have the contract to put up the new wing, are thus the sixth firm engaged in elaborating the designs for the Museum. The wing that they will build has a length of about three hundred and fifty feet, costing $1,250,000.

In comparing the Metropolitan Museum of Art in its completed form with the city's millionaire class will become more deeply interested, until New York at no distant day will be able to number among its possessions one of the greatest art museums in the world.

Judging by the rapidity of the growth of its treasures in the past such an achievement is not difficult to imagine. It was only thirty-five years ago that the Museum was started, in the smallest kind of way, by the exhibition of a collection of pictures, consisting chiefly of specimens of the Dutch and Flemish schools, with a few important works by Italian, French, Spanish, and English masters. The exhibition was given at 681 Fifth Avenue. Two years afterward the Museum, greatly enlarged, was moved to the Cruger mansion in West Fourteenth Street, where it remained seven years, when it was moved to the first building erected on its present site in Central Park. Since that time the Museum has been the recipient of numerous gifts, some of them of great value, such as the bequest of Catharine Lorillard Wolfe, who left her entire collection of oil paintings and water colors accompanied by an endowment of $200,000. This was followed by the munificent gift of the Museum's President, Henry G. Marquand, who added to the collections a large number of pictures, embracing fifty-three oil paintings by old masters as well as some specimens of the English school. The last gift of importance occurred four years ago when Jacob S. Rogers bequeathed to the institution his whole fortune, amounting to several millions of dollars, a bequest that enables the Museum to make regular and valuable additions to its collections.

THE NEW DIRECTOR, SIR C. PURDON CLARK

"The real nucleus of the Museum," declares George H. Story, who has been for fifteen years the curator of paintings, and is the Acting Director in the absence of Sir Purdon Clarke, "and what will ever be one of its greatest treasures, is found in the Cesnola Collection. Comparatively few Americans know the scientific and artistic value of the latter, about which a curator of a European museum acknowledges that he has had to come all the way to New York twice to study it. Alexander Stuart Murray, the greatest authority of the nineteenth century on Greek art, did not seek to hide his astonishment at the 'utter ignorance betrayed by American students of the treasures they have at home in the Central Park.' He wondered that they should 'rush across to London and Berlin, while yet unacquainted with one of the very finest collections in existence, under their very noses at home.' No European student of Greek art is unacquainted with the Cesnola Collection in the Metropolitan Museum of New York. Layard, the discoverer of Nineveh, in writing of this feature of our Museum, declares that it is superior in importance and in the nature of objects to the discoveries made by Schliemann in the Troades, while the conclusions of many other distinguished scholars from all parts of the world concerning the Cesnola Collection may be summarized as follows:

"The Cesnola Collection contributes to modern knowledge a wider field of art and a greater amount of important material than has ever before been accomplished by any discovery. It forms the most complete illustration of the history of ancient art and civilization, revolutionizing many of the theories of art. It contains the first known works of Phoenician art and introduces the Phoenicians as teachers of the Etruscans. It is the key to the origin and development of Greek civilization, illustrating the international encounter of races and arts in Cyprus, and the manner in which the civilization, religion, and art of the East were transmitted to and adopted by the Greeks. Thus, this collection determines the place of Greece in the history of art."

This important collection was made by Gen. di Cesnola, by some called the "founder of the Museum," its Director until his death last November, while he was American Consul at Cyprus forty years ago. It consists of 35,573 pieces—vases, statues, busts, sarcophagi, coins, lamps, &c.—all of which were excavated from the sites of ancient Cyprian cities under the direction of Cesnola, and forming one of the first of the Metropolitan Museum purchases.

Owing to the laws prohibiting the exportation of art antiquities from European countries since the above collection was made, it seems unlikely that such a comprehensive addition to the archaeological treasures of an American museum will be possible for a long time to come. Thus, the Metropolitan was exceedingly fortunate in acquiring it when it did.

"Notwithstanding the inestimable value of this Cypriote collection," said Mr. Story, "together with the various other objects of prime value included in the Museum's exhibits, it is in its paintings that the public has shown the greatest interest. The Metropolitan contains examples of nearly all the leading and world-famed schools of paintings, from Jan Van Eyck (1390-1440) to the latest and most interesting of the moderns, numbering in all 838 canvases, inclusive of the Vanderbilt loan exhibition.

"Genuine old masters are hard to find in these days. It was not so many decades ago that they were common enough in the shops of the art dealers of Rome. But now Italy guards jealously whatever it has of these priceless treasures, so that they are far harder to get than formerly. Nevertheless, in the galleries of the Metropolitan there are a sufficient number of such paintings to furnish the student with what he needs in specimens of this early and ever glorious period of art.

"The old masters that we have here, however, have been reproduced so invariably as the leading features of the Museum's collections of paintings that the public is apt to conclude that the latter is poor in examples of the great modern schools. This is misleading, as well as unfortunate, since, in an art institution of this character, aiming to give the best in art irrespective of schools or historical periods, the real achievements of the last century in painting are given an honored place. Thus it might be more to the purpose, in describing the contents of the Museum, to select specimens of our great masters, but of the masters of his own era as well."

An actual art school has not as yet been attempted by the Metropolitan Museum. Something in that direction exists in the occasional lectures on art that are given by professors from Columbia University. The plans for the new wing also include, besides additional exhibition rooms, a large lecture hall which, with the well-known educational tendencies of the new Director, Sir Purdon Clarke, will doubtless inaugurate a more complete development of this important feature of the institution than has been possible in the past.

As an opening of this new era upon which the Museum is now entering it is probable that shortly after Sir Purdon's arrival the Bramantino Panels, recently purchased by him in London, will be put on exhibition. These panels consist of twelve oil paintings on wood by Bramantino, one of the early Italian painters of the time of Raphael. Just before leaving England Sir Purdon also purchased for the Museum two small panel paintings of saints by Crevelli, costing $10,000, which will be shipped to America shortly. He also brings with him several fine plaster reproductions and a collection of antique furniture and wood carving, including an old German cabinet, and some French armor, and various examples of Chippendale work. Prior to Sir Purdon Clarke's departure from England arrangements were made by him with Ambassador Reid to act as Chairman of the Purchasing Committee for the Museum, which probably will be formed in London, and will make important additions from time to time to the Museum's art treasures.

Besides these immediate additions to the Museum that will either be put on exhibition now or when the new wing is opened, there is a collection of 8,000 Greek and Roman coins and an extremely valuable collection of tapestries and laces awaiting a place in the exhibition rooms. The bronze statue of the Emperor Trebonius Gallus, also, about which there was so much amusing controversy recently, has not as yet been assigned to a niche among the other exhibits of sculpture. Then there are the "Giustiniani Marbles" whose fate has not yet been determined—and, according to some Museum authorities, will never be permitted to make their bow to the public under the auspices of this Museum.

These marbles originally came from an old Roman palace and were offered for sale to the Metropolitan Museum about two years ago, but declined. They were afterward purchased by Mrs. Frederic Thomson and presented by her to the Museum. These consist of twenty heroic figures about whose antiquity there is no question, but upon whose pretensions to artistic beauty much doubt has been cast. Advocates of these statues claim for them a high degree of classic excellence and antique interest, in fact, say that they will rank next to the Cesnola Collection in importance, but with this view the majority of the trustees do not as yet appear to coincide. Those who actively oppose the placing of the collection on exhibition claim that it is merely the discarded refuse of the palace that formerly housed it, the best statues of which were purchased by the Italian Government, which would never have allowed these statues that are now awaiting judgment in the storerooms of the Museum to have left Italy if they were of any value as classic antiquities. They have been restored, also, say these irreverent critics, in a somewhat more realistic manner than is suitable or even allowable to modern taste, and so there is another nut for Sir Purdon Clarke to crack on his arrival in New York.

FIFTH AVE ENTRANCE TO METROPOLITAN MUSEUM AS IT IS TO-DAY

UNCLE SAM IS BADLY PESTERED BY THE "PERILS" MICROBE

MY DEAR BROTHER: When I called on my Uncle Sam the other night he seemed to be sick or upset about something, and I said:

"Uncle Sam, are you sick?"

He said: "No, my son, I ain't sick, I am pestered. Times have changed mightily, and I ain't sure that all these changes are for the best. The tenants on my estate have got a sort of notion that I'm to blame for everything that they think goes wrong, and with ths growtb of this notion they beset ms more and mors to put things in shape for tbem. Soon as anything happens they come running to me for a cure. Now, son, I know something about a great many things, but I ain't one of thoss doctors guaranteed to cure all sorts of aches and pains on short notice.

"Away back yonder, by soms means, there got fetched into my estate tnat old European disease they call the Perils. At first I said to Lummie (that's what my Uncle Sam calls his sister Columbia) 'I don't like this thing getting into these parts. It's been a powerful bad thing for a long time. It's what killed Jule Caesar's folks, and played the mischief in the estats of Louis number fourteen, and John Bull's folks have had it more than once, and now it's broke out here, and, Lummie, it's not a thing to project with, sure as you live.'

"But she said: 'Brother Sam, you needn't get excited, for this is a nsw land, and that disease can't thrive in this climate.'

"Well, it did pass away for a time, but I have been keeping my eye on the thing, and for ths last twenty-five years it's been thriving, climate or no climate. I don't ses that it has much choice about climate, for I've got all sorts of climate, and the thing breaks out in any or all of them. No, Sir, climate ain't got anything to do with it. So I told Lummie the other day that instead of it being a matter of climats it looked to me more like a matter of folks. No, son, I handled yellow fever down in Cuba, and I have put down smallpox in these parts, but this Perils grows.

"It's this that pesters me, and it is enough to pester a fellow. Mr. Jefferson was the first to discover it, and he said that he could cure it if he got to be overseer, and for this reason I was glad to have him take the joh; but, son, I really don't see that he did much to put it down. Anyhow, in these last times it has spread mightily and the most of my tenants are scared, and they are always coming to me and telling me that it has broke out in a new place, and that it's going to play the mischief if it ain't stopped.

"I never read but one book on the subject, and that was several years ago. It was written by a Mr. Strong, I believe. Well, he surely was versed in a knowledge of the Perils. Why, Sir, he took time and studied the thing and made a list of all the sorts that had appeared in my estate. I don't remember all the sorts he said was abroad in the land, but I remember there was a Mormon Perils, and a City Perils, and a Money Perils, and lots of others. Well, when I got through with that book I said: 'I ain't going to read any more on this Perils disease.' I had the blues for a whole fortnight.

"I went to hear a man speak once; he was a Mr. Bryan, I believe. He was the worst scared man I ever saw. He declared that the Perils bad broke out in his neighborhood, and was spreading so fast the whole country was in paramount danger of a fatal death. I said to myself, no doubt it's bad in his parts, but that man is so scared that he can't see anything but the Perils.

"No, my son, I'm pestered about this Perils disease. The papers tell of a man who has recently found three new sorts of the Perils, and from what he says they are the worst that have yet appeared, even worss than the sorts that plagued Jule Caesar's folks away back in his day. They are the System Perils, and the Yellow Car perils, and the Rebate Perils. The man whose name I believe is Lawson, or something of that sort, says that these are peculiar to my estate, that they never were found in any other part of the earth. Well, son, if we've got to have the Perils I want some of our own make. I believe in the policy of home produce for home consumption. Better die with a home-raised disease than an imported one.

"Now the thing that pesters me most is not that the Perils is abroad in the estate, nor that there are new sorts of it. The thing that keeps me in an agitated state of morals is the blams they want to put on me. My overseer, Mr. Roosevelt, you know, is mighty smart, and he came in some time ago and said that he was going to look after this Perils situation and sss if something couldn't be done to stop it, at least to head off its progress. I told him he had the right of way. I told him how Mr. Jefferson, that had his job away back yonder, thought he could stop it, but he didn't. Well, he said he would look into the cause of it. And I believe he will, for he has a powerful appetite for looking into things.

"I haven't any objection to this looking about to see where the thing comes from, but they say I must cure it. They want me to taks up the Rebate Perils and the Yellow Car Perils and the Graft Perils and dose them. Now I ain't going to do it. Your Uncle Sam ain't going to turn himself into a hospital nurse with a white coat on and set up with sick folks for a living. This is what pesters me. I never brought this Perils here, and the folks who hatched it can cure it or it ain't going to be cured.

"Now, son, you hear that. Such work ain't in keeping with my position. Think of me going about in my estate rolling pills, making plasters, looking at tongues, and suggesting diets. John Bull told me once that the more you do for your tenants the more they would say you ought to do, and finally they would come out and say you had it to do, and it seems to me that my crowd is about to reach this last dispensation of impudence. I find that I am getting a helpless set on my hand. They can't get up a little show without coming to me for a big contribution, they can't build a little bridge across a creek without sending the bill to me. I've got to do nearly everything for them—run the boll weevils out of their cotton patches, keep the Chinese from setting up too many wash shops in their midst, say how much they ought to pay for a round trip ticket to their Stats fair, invest their life insurance savings, tell Mr. Rockefeller how muoh oil he can pump out of the ground every day, and if this thing keeps on they'll want me to fix the number of children each man should have in his family, and what color his wife's hair ought to be.

"No, I told Mr. Roosevelt to go ahead and look into the situation of the Perils, but not to forget that I had a written contract with these tenants, and that I would stand by it. Away back in the early times my tenants didn't pester me so much. When they had Indians to fight and bears to kill and big woods to cut down and long rides to take a-foot and to make their own clothes, they were less liable to take ths Perils, but now that the Indians are penned up and the bears are all dead and the woods havs been turned into rich fields and the land is full of Pullman cars and excursion rates thsy ketch the Perils in whole droves. No, Sir, my son, the trouble ain't in the climate and it ain't in the dirt—it's in the folks.

"Lummie was telling me that there is a woman, Miss Tarbell by name, I believe, who has written a book on the Perils. Lummie thinks whsn a woman writes a book that it's a sure sign of prosperity and a dispensation of perfection. But I told Lummie that I didn't want any Perils of the feminins gender. I like women some, yet it seems to me that they will thrive faster if they let the Perils alone. I've got a notion myself about ths real cause of this epidemic of the Perils, and I told my overseer, Mr. Roosevelt, when he was looking around, to see if I wasn't about right. My notion is that it is caused from a microoe, yes a microbe, for thsy are the sole causes of latter-day diseases, and that this Perils microbe is a cross between the microbe of laziness and the microbe of hallucination, and when it gets into one's system it attacks his brain and his liver at the same time, which double onslaught upssts the whole system, and he can't tell the difference between what is in him and what ain't in him. That's my notion, son. Your affectionate brother JONATHAN."

Mrs. Gunbusta—Let me think; there's something else I want I'm sure. Oh, yes; a pound of coal tar dye, a shilling's worth of salicylic acid, sixteen ounces of calcium bisulphite—I want all the bones out—a pint of benzoic acid, and a can of glucose.

Grocer's Boy—Vs baf no glucose got, mum.

Mrs. Gunbusta—Well, cottonseed oil will do, and one pound of oleomargarine—

Grocer's Boy—Vot color?

Mrs. Gunbusta—Pink, I guess; tbat will match best with my new tablecloth. Then bring me a bottle of wood alcohol, (lemou flavor.) I think that's all.

Grocer's Boy—We have a nice line of antidotes got.

Mrs. Gunbusta—No, I have plenty on hand. Just hurry that order along as quickly as you can.

Grocer's Boy—Yah.

Radium May Prolong the Sun's Life Indefinitely

Mary Proctor Explains the Theories Regarding the Maintenance of the Sun's Heat---If Composed in Part of Radium It Will Warm the Earth for at Least a Billion Years More

THE sun, the ruler of the planetary system, is the great dispenser of light and heat to its circling family of planets. The amount of heat squandered by the sun is enormous, for only an extremely small amount is intercepted by the earth. The other planets—Jupiter, Saturn, Venus, Mercury, and Mars—come in for their own share, but it would be easy to show that the sun distributes sufficient heat to maintain thousands of planets in the same comfortable circumstances as those in which our earth is placed.

We can measure the quantity of heat that the sun constantly emits, because we can measure the amount received by our earth, which intercepts about 1-2,300,000,000 of all the light and heat emitted by the sun. In every second of time the sun emits as much heat as would result from the combustion of 11,600,000,000,000 tons of coal.

Each portion of the sun's surface as large as our earth gives out as much heat per second as would result from the combustion of a billion tons of coal. From this it is easily calculated that if the sun's whole mass consisted of coal and could burn right out to the last ton, maintaining till then the present rate of emission, the supply would not last more than 5,000 years. At the end of that time the sun would be nothing but a burned-out cinder!

The question arises: How is the sun's heat maintained? and the view most commonly accepted is that the heat of the sun is kept up by the constant contraction of its mass through the gravitation of its particles toward the centre. As the sun cools it must grow smaller, so that its outward portions fall toward its centre.

In this falling so much heat is acquired that if the sun remains gaseous it will continually grow hotter. Finally a time will come when it can contract no more. Then a solid crust will form over the surface, this crust will gradually cool off by the heat which it radiates, and the sun will grow dark and cold. Frozen and lifeless among its lifeless family of planets, the sun will at last solidify and become a dark, rigid globe like the moon.

According to Prof. Newcomb, this fate will not overtake the sun for some five or ten million years at least. But this lease of life may be greatly extended if the theory lately advanced proves true, namely, that the sun's energy is due to the presence of radium in its composition. The supposition is that a small fraction of the sun's substance is radium, which will enormously prolong the calculated period during which that body will be able to give out heat enough to maintain animal and vegetable life upon the earth.

Radium, as we know, is constantly throwing off heat, without itself getting any colder, although it has no apparent source of supply from which it can replace the heat it has lost. As a popular writer on the subject expresses it, radium lays itself open to the same suspicion as those incur who are constantly spending money without having any visible means of supply.

Now, we know that a red-hot poker will gradually cool down to the temperature of surrounding objects if it is taken out of the fire. The mere fact that the poker is hot implies that it is giving out heat and getting cooler each moment. In a comparatively short time it grows cold. But suppose the other end of the poker is constantly receiving a fresh supply of heat energy from a hot fire, then, while that is the case, the outer end of the poker need not grow cooler—the heat being replaced as fast as it is dissipated.

But with radium it is different. This wonderful substance can keep warm, can therefore continue giving heat energy to the ether without itself growing any cooler, although the dissipated energy is not replaced from any visible external source, such as a fire. It is as if a red-hot poker could keep hot indefinitely without getting a renewal from any external source of the heat energy which it is constantly sending out in all directions.

If, then, the sun is partly composed of radium, "we can rest comforted," as Sir Robert S. Ball remarked in a lecture recently, "in the belief that it will warm this old earth for one billion years." It does seem most appropriate that the sun, which squanders its heat so lavishly, should have a store of radium from which it can obtain a supply equal to itself in prodigality. Whether there is radium in the sun, however, is a question not yet definitely settled.

A few months ago, the writer had a conversation with the eminent astronomer, Prof. C. A. Young, on the subject, and in reply to the question: "Is there radium in the sun?" he remarked: "Radium in the sun may explain a considerable part of the sun's output of heat, so that the computed rate of contraction would be greatly diminished. (The computation thus far being based on the solar heat observed at the earth.) Probably as radium is on the earth, it may be in the sun.

\+ + +

"Prof. Snyder of the Philadelphia High School considers he has found evidence of its presence in the sun by comparing the lines reported in the spectrum of radium with the known lines in the solar spectrum. The apparent coincidences which he has found are not yet, however, regarded as conclusive."

The question of how the sun's heat is maintained is one of vital importance. All life on the surface of the earth is sustained by heat from the sun, which is radiated to us as heat from a fire in an open fireplace is radiated to all parts of the room. If the sun should cease to give out light and heat, the air and the whole surface of the earth would slowly cool off. In a few days it would be freezing cold at the equator. In a few weeks the whole ocean would be frozen over, and the soil would freeze to such a depth as to kill every plant Men and animals might be able to keep alive for a while by means of artificial heat, but they would soon starve in consequence of not having anything to eat.

The same fate would overtake our planet, which Flammarion has so graphically described in his book "Lumen," although the cause would be due to somewhat different circumstances. He suggests what would happen should our planet wander aimlessly in epace, and away from the warming influence of the sun.

"All the water on the earth would become solid, and gases in their turn become liquid, while human beings would find themselves frozen on the spot. The globe would carry into space the singular panorama of the whole human race immovably congealed, in the various attitudes assumed by each individual creature at the moment of the catastrophe. They would have been transformed into millions of statues sunk in a complete lethargy, for the cold ould preserve them. Not till they returned to the neighborhood of the sun could they be resuscitated."

We scarcely realize the debt of gratitude we owe the sun for its bountiful supply of heat, and so accustomed are we to this daily gift that it is somewhat startling to reflect on the dire results which would follow its withdrawal. Nevertheless, unless something intervenes to reverse the ordinary course of things, we have no reason to fear such a catastrophe. Rather we have reason to believe that if radium is actually proved to form part of the sun's substance, the catastrophe may be said to be indefinitely postponed, as far as our knowledge of this future event is concerned.

MARY PROCTOR.

UNCLE SAM HAS A BIG SWEET TOOTH.

NO article imported is more important to Uncle Sam es a revenue bringer than sugar, and none brings him so much trouble in his Custom Houses. The resources of science are invoked to ascertain the exact quality of every pound of sugar imported, and duty is assessed in accordance with these findings.

One of the most interesting corners in the big building at Christopher end Greenwich Streets, known as the Appraisers' Stores, is the polariscope room on the tenth floor. It is there that the tests are mede by which the duty on every importetion of sugar that comes into this port is determined. So accurately is this done that the tests ere corrected for temperature, and to this extreme accuracy importers of sugar are strenuously objecting.

The sweetening power of sugar depends on the proportion of chemically pure sucrose contained in a given quantity of it, and the duty to be levied on it depends on its strength in sucrose.

The utmost care is exercised in making the tests and in sampling the sugar for them. When a cargo of sugar arrives samples are drawn from each of the packages and sent in a sealed can to the Appraisers' Stores. There each sample is numbered, samples are drawn from it for preservation as a record, and a sample is sent to the laboratory for test. The laboratory operators know the sugar only by number, and often they are given two or even more samples for test from the same package. The result of every test is hung up on a sheet in the Appraisers' office for the inspection of importers. If the Government's test fails to agree with that of the importer he may ask for a retest. The controversy in the courts between the importers and the Government has been over the exactitude of the Government's test. The importers declare that the ordinary commercial test in which no correction is made for temperature ought to be sufficient. Its adoption would save them many thousands of dollars a year in duties.

The United States is the greatest consumer of sugar in the world. The total world's production is about 9,000,000 tons a year, and of this we consume about 2,500,000 tons, or a per capita consumption of about 70 pounds. The revenue to the United States from sugar duties is $50,000,000 a year. The domestic production is so small that it cuts very little figure in the supply, and even then it has been much reduced since the passage of the Cuban reciprocity treaty, which by reducing the duty on Cuban sugars has driven the American product out of the market.

In spite of the reduction in the price of raw sugar, owing to the reduction in duty, the price of refined sugar is advancing. Last year raw 96 test sugar was quoted at 3⅝ cents, while this year its price is 3 15-16 cents. Refined granulated sugar, which was 4.85 cents last year, is now 4.90 cents.

Romance of Princess Jeanne Bonaparte

Paris, Oct. 20.

THE death of Princess Jeenne Bonaparte removes from French society one of its most romantic figures. She was the widow of that Prince Pierre Bonaparte who shot dead the journalist Victor Noir, and by this savage action did more to pave the way for the fall of the Second Empire than all the Republican Opposition. She herself wes of lowly birth, and her marriage to Prince Pierre was considered by the Bonaparte family to be so shocking a mésalliance that neither was received at Court, and so complete was the disavowal that the romantic young couple came near at one time to dying of starvation.

Prince Pierre Bonaparte was himself the scion of a mésalliance. His father, Prince Lucien, had been disinherited by Napoleon for having made a runaway match with Mlle. de Bleschamp. After the fall of the First Empire there was a general tendency on the part of the Bonaparte Princes to marry into bourgeois families, and even Prince Jerome, or Plon-Plon, ee he wes nicknamed, was at one time engaged to the daughter of a successful confectioner. The improved prospects of the Bonapartist cause, however, prevented this match, and Plon-Plon chose a wife from the House of Savoy.

Prince Lucien's son, Prince Pierre, was subsisting on a meagre pension when he announced his intention of imitating his father and marrying the daughter of a foreman carpenter named Ruflin, employed in the Faubourg St. Antoine, which is the quarter of Paris where all the furniture is manufactured. The girl was of surpassing beauty, both well educated and intelligent, and her grandfather, who had been an officer under Napoleon, had brought her up in admiration of the imperial legend.

The marriage, to which Napoleon III. refused his consent, took place in private, and the couple then went to reside in a small villa at Auteuil, a western suhurb of Paris. It was then that a violent attack was made upon Prince Pierre by Henri Rochefort, the famous polemist, in the columns of the Lanterne. Rochefort being a nobleman of ancient lineage, the Prince was forced to send him his seconds. As an additional affront, the Marquis de Rochefort chose to represent him the most insignificant reporter on the Lanterne's staff, a diminutive humpback named Victor Noir, of Jewish origin, noted among his comrades for his gay wit and cool impudence. Prince Pierre received this shabby emissary with hauteur, and was so rude that Victor Noir, more out of bravado than with any serious intention, raised his glove as if to strike him. Instantly the Prince whipped out a revolver and shot the little journalist dead.

Victor Noir's funeral was made the occasion for a colossal demonstration against the Imperial Government, and Rochefort is fond of relating that he has since received more than 20,000 begging letters from persons who claim to have "shaken hands with him at the funeral of Victor Noir," and that the list is still growing.

Prince Pierre was tried for murder and acquitted, but shortly afterward the empire fell, and his already slender resources disappeared in the general wreck of the family fortunes. It was his bourgeois consort who now came to the rescue. She bravely opened a bonnet shop in London, with the proceeds of which she managed to support her husband and the entire family, which now included two children, Prince Roland and Princess Jeanne. Duruy, one of Napoleon III.'s former Ministers, generously paid for the boy's education at a French lycée, while the Princess Jeanne, as courageous as her mother, took lessons in painting and engraving, drew for the illustrated magazines, and exhibited signed pictures at the Salon. At the art school which she attended she met the immensely wealthy heiress who was to become Princess Roland Bonaparte and to raise this interesting branch of the Bonaparte family from the state of abject misery into which it had fallen.

Princess Jeanne received from her friend a "dot" of $400,000, and to-day is the wife of the Marquis de Villeneuve, a former officer in the army of Don Carlos of Spain, who was until recently Deputy for Corsica. Her salon is frequented by the cream of American society in Paris and by the most illustrious men of letters and artists. Her husband is, apart from politics, mostly interested in occultism. Prince Roland Bonaparte has employed much of his immense wealth in the formation of one of the finest private libraries in the world, for which he has had a special building erected in the Avenue de Jena.

Great Events in the Life of De Witt Clinton Will Decorate New High School

THE opening of the De Witt Clinton High School, on Tenth Avenue, near Fifty-ninth Street, will in itself testify the gratitude of posterity for a character which had many of the virtues of the Roman statesman before Rome became imperial. Certainly De Witt Clinton deserved well of the republic. To name a magnificent public school after him is peculiarly fitting, in that we owe to him a great deal of the early success of our public school system. A wide reader and a writer on natural history and the antiquities of the State, he used his influential position when first appointed Mayor of New York to encourage science, letters, and the arts. But this was only one part of De Witt Clinton's manifold activities. He it was who started an agitation in 1812 to obtain the means of linking the great lakes with the ocean by means of a waterway from Lakes Erie and Champlain to the head of navigation in the Hudson. It was he who tried to get Congress to make of the Erie Canal a National highway, and when the Government refused to undertake the task he did not despair.

Three years later he was politically a broken man; yet it was then that he appealed to the people of the State and saw his arguments accepted. In 1816 he whom no politician regarded as a possible candidate for anything was elected Governor. By one of those chances—the election of Gov. Tompkins to the Vice Presidency of the United States—the power of Clinton's appeal for a canal—he was swept into the Governor's chair in spite of the politicians. The next year, on the 4th day of July, 1817, he had the satisfaction of digging with his own hands the first spadeful of earth which was to inaugurate not only the Erie Canal and the other canals of the State, but those of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and other States.

De Witt Clinton School is to have two large wall paintings in the auditorium, a hall 100 feet square, on each side of the little stage over against the main entrance. Yesterday they were shown by the painter, Charles Y. Turner, at the American Fine Arts Building, and they are reproduced here from the photograph.

Public schools, sanitation, the militia, police, civic and religious liberty—these were objects for which De Witt Clinton strove from 1803 to 1807, during his first term of service as Mayor of this city. He had been an Assemblyman and a Senator at Albany, and resigned to take the Mayoralty. At that time Mayors were appointed by a Council of Appointment, consisting of the Governor and certain Senators. The ups and downs of politics are seen in the fact that De Witt Clinton, removed by the Council in 1807, was reappointed in 1809, displaced in 1810, and restored in 1811, when he became also Lieutenant Governor.

The next year he ran for the Presidency against Madison. His enemies took the Lieutenant Governorship from him in 1813 and removed him from the Mayoralty in 1815. But this man, so made a football of in the contests of Federals and Republicans, never allowed himself to forget the great intgrests of the State involved in bringing the commerce of the Atlantic to the Middle West. He lived to see the marvelous work accomplished. Like a conqueror, but not a Roman conqueror, he made a progress through that canal which he had planned and foreseen, pushed with pen and speech, inaugurated, and fathered. And he went as Governor of the State, having been re-elected deepite the efforts of a host of enemiee whom his success and his somewhat uncompromising character had raised up against him.

The painter has chosen two ecenes from this triumphal progress. One is that when the canalboat on which the Governor and his party were embarked reached the Valley of the Mohawk. It was in October, 1825, and the reaches of the Mohawk show beyond the ruddy leaves of trees near the bank. To the left one sees a bit of a lock with a boy on the beam; the canalboat is just down to a new level on its progress to the Hudson. Gov. Clinton stands in front of the group; near him sits his second wife, who was a Miss Catherine Jones. As the boat slowly forged along the citizens gathered from all eides to hurrah and fire the village cannon. It was somewhat different from the days when the canal was a cause of violent polemic and party abuse, and the disgusted young poet could write:

And when I'm troubled with the blues,
Damn Clinton and abuse Canals.

This violence of party spirit was quizzed some five or six years before this time by Joseph Rodman Drake, who, in one of the "Croaker" poems—not the one just quoted—swears that hie part of New York is becoming unbearable owing to the noise made by the politicians soliciting votes, and ironically adjures Capt. Seaman Weekes of the Tenth Ward to find him another house in the Tenth:

In vain I endeavor to give 'em a hint on Sense, reason or temper—they laugh at it all;
For sense is nonsense when it makes against Clinton,
And reason is treason in Tammany Hall.

So I mean (though I fear I shall ssem unto some a
Strange, obstinate, wrong-headed kind of an elf)
To strike my old tent in the Fourth and bscome a
Tenth Ward Independent Elector myself.

And in January of 1825 the other partner of the Croaker firm of bards, Fitz Greene Halleck, versifies De Witt Clinton's speech to the Legislature, as a proper subject for satire, owing to its length and breadth and infinite variety:

A clear and comprehensive view
Of everything in art and nature,
In this my opening speech is due
To an enlightened Legislature.
I therefore have arranged with care,
In orderly classification,
The following subjects which should share
Your most mature deliberation.

Physicians, Senators, and makers
Of patent medicines and machines,
The train bands and the Shaking Quakers,
Forts, colleges, and quarantines,
Debts, cadets, coal mines, and canals;
Salt—the Comptroller's next report,
Reform within our prison walls,
The customs and the Supreme Court,
Delinquents, juvenile and gray;
Schools, steamboats, Justices of Peace,
Republics of the present day,
And those of Italy and Greece.

Perhaps De Witt Clinton was prolix in his advice to the Legislature, but it was an age when people had time to read, and certainly the reforms he suggested were badly needed. And by the way, Halleck refers to his aspirations to the Presidency, making him say:

I've climbed my country's loftiest tree
And reached its highest bough save one;
Why not the highest? Blame not me;
"What man dare" do—I've done.
And though thy city, Washington,
Still mocks my eagle wing and eye,
Yet is there joy upon a throne
Even here in Albany.

The other mural painting depicte the ceremony performed by De Witt Clinton on the deck of a steamboat in the lower bay off Sandy Hook in the same year of 1825. Certain green and brass kegs which are etill extant contained water from Lake Erie, and these the Governor solemnly poured into the Atlantic while the bands played and the guns roared. Gov. Clinton was by virtue of his office Commander in Chief of the State forces on sea and land, but he wore no uniform. He was above uniforms, since he bestowed them. His liberality in distributing military titles to his fellow-citizens was a constant theme for the indignation and sarcasm of his political enemies. The painter has introduced into the group behind him a number of uniforms, not in order to refer to this passion of Clinton for distributing military titles, but because they add to the brilliancy of the scene.

Clinton is raising one of the green and gold kegs on high and pouring the fresh water into the salt. Behind him stands an Admiral, and next comes his friend Dr. Samuel L. Mitchell, whom he made the first Surgeon General of the State. He wears his doctor's gown, for he was a graduate of the famous medical school at Edinburgh. The bald pate behind him is Richard Riker, the Recorder, who lived to 1842, though in his hot youth he fought a duel with Sam Swartwout all along of politics, the latter being a partisan of Aaron Burr, while Riker was an ardent admirer of De Witt Clinton. He is the "Dear Dick Riker" to whom Halleck addressed a poetical epistle over the pen name Thomas Castaly:

And time has worn the baldness now
Of Julius Caesar on your brow.

Just behind Dr. Mitchell stands Cadwallader D. Colden, who was made a Major General by the Governor and wes Mayor in 1819. To the right, next to the Brigadier General, whose name the painter has not divulged, stands Philip Hone, Mayor that year, and later on Naval Officer in the Custom House, that Philip Hone who left a diary filled with big and little events in New York from 1810 to 1850. On the table to the right stands an array of bottles, tall and short, square and slim-shouldered, which might easily be taken for signs of an incipient jollification; but they are not. Water from great rivers about the world was brought to the solemnity, and after the Great Lakes had been married to the ocean the contents of these bottles were poured into the sea to act as friends at the wedding.

The Nile, Seine, and Rhine were certainly represented in this gathering. At a distance on the left is seen one of the river steamboats of the day, successors of Fulton's Claremont, and the frigate with the British flag is a vessel which happened to be in port at the time. Above the group of men behind Clinton one secs the pilot with a spyglass. The water is roughened with linee of foam. In the distance, hidden by the emoke of the saluting guns, tower the spars of other vessels. It is a great moment for Gov. Clinton which the painter has chosen. And it came near his end, for three years later Clinton was dead.

These two big paintings will clothe the wall of the auditorium about fifteen feet above the floor, reaching from the dado to the ceiling. Betweeen them comes the stage with an organ in the niche. They offer in flat decorative tints suited to the architecture of the room two incidents which schoolboys and schoolgirls learn by rote in their books and promptly forget. They will not forget the main facts of the Erie Canal if they see these pictures. These will interest them and remain in memory.

Observe the skill with which the painter has grouped his many figures, bringing the chief actors in silhouette for due prominence. It is well that a beginning has been made of mural decorations for schools. The Board of Education is to be congratulated. This is the first instance of the placing of historical scenes on the walls of a public school. The choice of subjects was good, for they refer to New York, and commemorate a great turning point in the history of city and State. The Erie Canal had a magical effect in raising the population and adding to the commerce of the State. Mr. Turner has done his work well.

Financing a Political Campaign in New York

Some Idea of the Hundreds of Thousands of Dollars It Costs to Find Out the Views of the Voters as to Their Choice of Rulers---Where the Money Comes from and Where It Goes.

TWO million dollars, on a conservative estimate, will be spent in ascertaining the will of the people at the coming election. Nearly one million will be spent by the city directly, and the other million will represent the expenditures of the candidates and the organizations.

There are now 1,948 election districts in the City of New York. Since the last election they have been increased from 1,550 to that number. The average rent paid for a polling booth on the four days of registration and the day of election is about $47.50. That would make a cost for the rental of election booths of $92,500. In each election booth there are four Inspectors. They receive $7.50 for each of the four days of registration, and $12 for their work on election day, making their compensation $42 in all. The total amount paid out for Inspectors of Election will be $327,264.

In addition to the Inspectors of Election there are also in each polling place two ballot clerks at $8 each, and two poll clerks at $12 each. They serve only on the day of election. The compensation of the ballot clerks will aggregate $31,168, and that of the poll clerks $46,752.

The Board of Elections estimates that the cost of newspaper advertising in connection with the coming election will approximate $200,000. In addition to the newspaper advertising the board has to have a good deal of other printing done, such, for instance, as printed instructions and placards.

The printing of the ballots alone will cost $50,000.

Pencils, pens, ink, mucilage, and paper have to be supplied to every election booth. That makes another considerable item of expense.

\+ + +

Owing to the fact that this year there are more tickets in the field than usual, the work of the Board of Elections has been greatly increased. It is a long time since the board has had so many complications growing out of indorsements, independent petitions, and protests to deal with as it has had this year. That has meant the employment of many more clerks than have been necessary to discharge the work of the board in municipal elections heretofore, and a consequent large increase in the expenditure under that item. The board has endeavored to be as economical as possible in the matter of extra clerk hire, with the result that the clerks who have been engaged have been compelled to work with the Commissioners far into the night in order to accomplish the tasks which had to be completed.

After the election is over the expense will not be at an end. There probably will be contests which will engage the attention of the Board of Review. That will mean additional expense to the city. The Election Commissioners themselves say that the total cost of the election to the city cannot fall much short of a million.

The amount expended by the city to have the people express their will at the polls will be duplicated by the candidates who are seeking the suffrage of the electors.

Tammany, of course, has more money to spend than any other organization, and is spending it freely. Leaders in Tammany who were questioned as to the amount that Tammany would put out to elect Mayor McClellan and the other candidates on the city, county, and borough tickets said that it would not fall short of $500,000.

\+ + +

It was learned from an authentic source that when Edward M. Shepard was the Democratic candidate for Mayor, Richard Croker, the then leader of Tammany Hall, spent $300,000 in advertising alone. Mr. Croker had the advertising craze in that campaign. Banners and stereopticons were put up all over the city, every available dead wall was covered with Tammany lithographs, and whole pages were used in the newspapers day after day to assist in persuading the voters to support Mr. Shepard as against Mr. Low.

Charles F. Murphy, the present leader of Tammany Hall, will be much more modest in his expenditures for advertising than Mr. Croker was in the last campaign which he directed.

\+ + +

Tammany probably has fifty big banners out this year in New York County. The average price of these banners is $400. Tammany has put a big banner in each Assembly district of the city. The additional banners hung by Tammany have been stretched across Broadway and other prominent thoroughfares. Tammany's expenditures for banners alone, therefore, will be $20,000. Senator McCarren has probably spent one-third that amount for Democratic banners in Kings County.

Tammany is doing a great deal of advertising in the small papers and a great deal of circularizing. At least two Tammany circulars will be sent to every registered voter in Manhattan and the Bronx. As the number of registered voters in Manhattan and the Bronx is 363,633, and as a two-cent stamp is necessary for each circular, it will be seen what a costly undertaking that is. Senator McCarren will have a similar expense to meet in Kings, as will also Borough President Cassidy in Queens.

\+ + +

Mayor McClellan's personal headquarters in the Bartholdi Hotel, which comprise the greater part of the second floor, will cost him at least $6,000 for the campaign. That includes clerk hire and the cost of circulars distributed at the headquarters.

\+ + +

Tammany will expend at least $3,000 a night for campaign orators during the last two weeks of the campaign. The average price for the campaign orator who hires out is $5 for an outdoor meeting and $10 for an inside meeting. The Republican County Committee's speakers' bureau has officially announced that it has 500 orators in the field. There are not over one hundred of these who are volunteers. The rest are paid. Tammany has at least as many paid orators as the Republicans have and probably has many more, having much more money to spend.

If Tammany on election day sends $200 into each election district, which is a moderate estimate, the total amount furnished the leaders for election day expenses would be approximately $400,000.

William M. Ivins, the Republican candidate for Mayor, has his headquarters in the Breslin. He has a suite of six rooms. One of his campaign managers yesterday estimated that the cost of Mr. Ivins's personal campaign would be less than $6,000. That includes all the expenses of his headquarters. Mr. Ivins has refused to receive any contribution from the Republican County Committee toward the expenses of his personal campaign.

\+ + +

As an illustration of how campaign expenses mount up it was said yesterday by one of the men in Mr. Ivins's headquarters that the telephone bill for the headquarters would be $50 a day. There are several telephones in the headquarters and they are busy all day. Every time a call is made from the headquarters there is a charge of 10c.

\+ + +

William R. Hearst, the Municipal Ownership candidate for Mayor, has his headquarters in the Hoffman House. He started in with two rooms and now has the greater part of two floors. His cost for headquarters will greatly exceed that of either Mayor McClellan or Mr. Ivins. He is occupying more space and has a larger force of clerks at work. The cost of conducting his headquarters alone will probably stand Mr. Hearst from $15,000 to $20,000.

Next to the fight over the Mayoralty the big interest in the campaign centres in the fight over the District Attorneyship. Mr. Jerome's headquarters are in the Gilsey House. He has several large rooms. Mr. Jerome, having been nominated by petition, was under an expense which the Mayoralty candidates did not have to bear. He had to have hundreds of thousands of petitions printed and circulated throughout the city. What Mr. Jerome's personal campaign will cost him will be insignificant compared to the amount which will be expended on it by the Citizens' Union, which is devoting all of its energies in the campaign to Mr. Jerome's election. An appeal was issued by the Union for $50,000 to cover the expenses the Union felt it necessary to make on behalf of Mr. Jerome, and from the responses thus far made to the appeal it would appear that the Citizens' Union will have that amount placed at its disposal through voluntary contributions.

Every candidate of each of the parties on the city, county, and borough tickets has his personal headquarters. The amounts which these headquarters will cost the candidates will vary, of course, but none of them will escape with an expenditure of less than several hundred dollars. Even Assembly and Aldermanic candidates have to get out their literature and spend money in other ways in order to make their canvass effective.

In 1887 William M. Ivins, one of the big figures in the present campaign, published a book entitled "Money in Elections in New York City." The work was devoted to the organization of the machines and the amount of money which they used to carry an election. Even in those days ascertaining the will of the electorate of New York was a very expensive proceeding.

Then, as now, the money used in elections was raised to a considerable extent by the assessment of candidates. Every candidate was forced to contribute according to his means and the importance of the office for which he was named. Here is an extract from Mr. Ivins's book:

"Mayor Hewitt paid $12,000 apiece to the County Democracy and to Tammany Hall. Mr. Edson paid, or there was paid to his account, $10,000 apiece to the County Democracy and to Tammany Hall, and $5,000 to Irving Hall. Mayor Grace paid $10,000 to the County Democracy when he last ran, and the Citizens' Committee of that year expended about $10,000 in voluntary contributions. In 1880 Mayor Grace paid $12,500 to Irving Hall and $7,500 to Tammany Hall. In 1878 Mayor Cooper practically created a party, at what cost to himself he only knows. In 1876 Mayor Ely is reported not to have paid over $5,000. John Reilly is said, upon good authority, to have paid Tammany $50,000 for the nomination for Register in 1883."

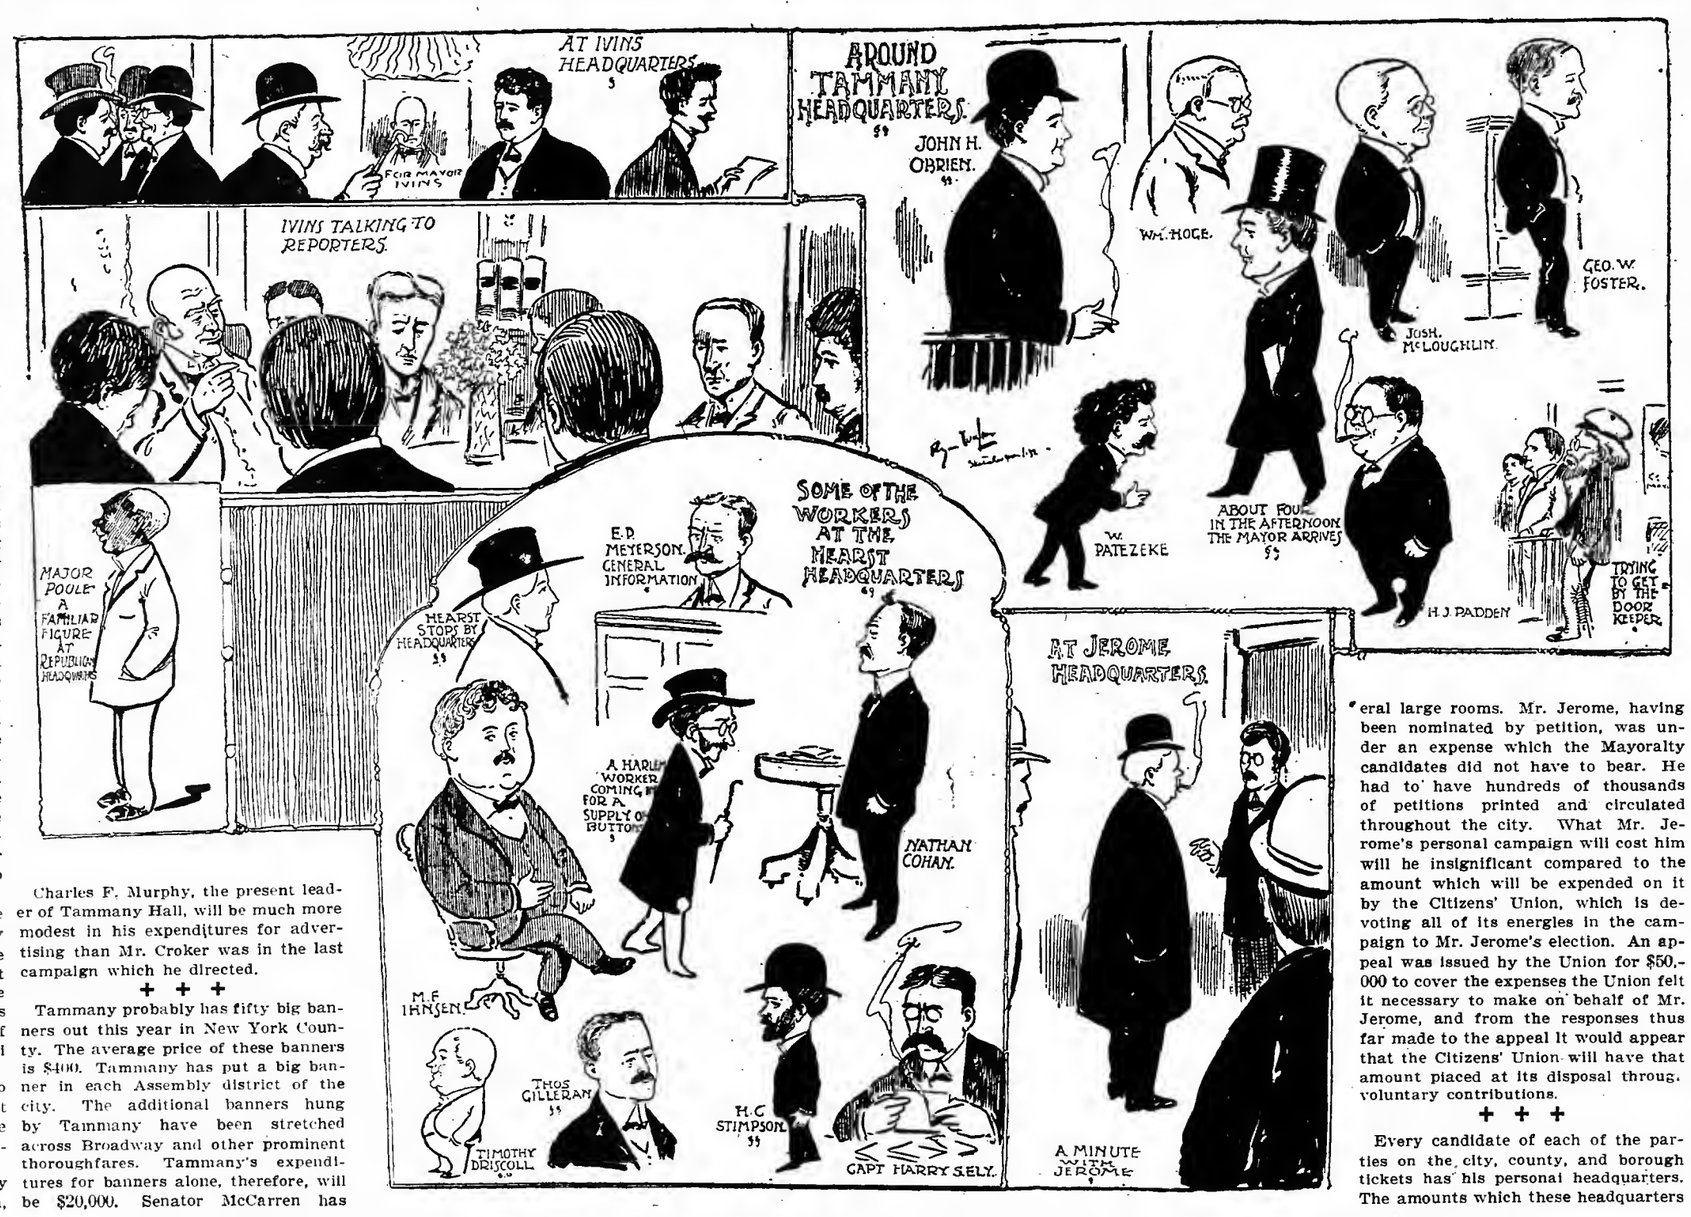
Notwithstanding the growth of the city since the time when Mr. Ivins wrote, and of the consequent greater honor and importance of a city office such as Mayor or Controller, or President of the Board of Aldermen, it is probable that the candidates for those offices are not compelled to pay any more, if as much, in the way of assessments now as they were in those days. The reason is obvious. As the city has grown in population and wealth, the favors which its administrations have to grant are greater and those who seek them are willing to contribute more liberally.

As has been shown in the insurance investigation, it has been the practice of great corporations to make large contributions to campaign funds. Some of the public utility corporations, in order to be in the good graces of both organizations, contribute liberally to both. It is the scandal of such contributions which has caused the agitation for the passage of a Corrupt Practices act in this State, but thus far the agitation has proved fruitless. The bill drawn up by Perry Belmont, which was before the last Legislature, will be pushed again this Winter, and the disclosures of the insurance investigation with respect to campaign contributions made by the big insurance companies undoubtedly will create a sentiment for its enactment which was lacking at the last session.



100 YEARS OF MEDICINE IN GREATER NEW YORK

ONE hundred years in the practice of medicine and surgery. That seems like a mile-stone worth looking at and thinking about. Some pain has been endured, some suffering alleviated in that time in New York State; in New York City merely. Other organizations may celebrate events more appealing to the poetic and sentimental side of men, but none surely can rejoice in the contemplation of a past more useful to humanity.

This is the event which physicians and surgeons have already begun to celebrate in this State, and will celebrate with considerable more éclat a little later. The Medical Society of the County of New York began the celebration of its centennial in a quiet and unostentatious way at the Academy of Medicine on Monday evening last. The more elaborate celebration of the centennial by the State organization will probably take place in Albany in the latter part of January next. Although there are two State organizations now, the State Medical Society and the State Medical Association, they are to be merged into one before that event. The organization which since 1882 has been known as the Medical Association left the parent body twenty-three years ago, but, like a prodigal, is returning home again. The legal steps for its reception in the parental household are now under way.

Arrangements for the celebration of the medical and surgical centennial have not yet been completed. The arrangements, so far as the Medical Society of the County of New York will take a part in it, will devolve upon Floyd M. Crandall, who was elected President on Monday evening last. That the affair will be on a scale elaborate and dignified enough to properly emphasize what has been accomplished in this country in medicine and surgery during the past one hundred years goes without saying. The affair will be essentially a State celebration, but prominent physicians from all over the world will be present as speakers.

The centennial celebration on Monday evening by the Medical Society of the County of New York was a modest and homelike affair. Although the meeting was well attended, and considerable pride in the organization's past was manifested in one way or another, the papers which were read were brief—or, what is more accurate, only portions of them were allowed to be read. This because one evening is too short a time in which to tell the doings of a century, especially the achievements and progress made in medicine and surgery in that time.

That during its one hundred years of effort the Medical Society of the County of New York has had among its members men of whom it is extremely proud was pointed at in a little address which A. Jacobi made, his speech being down on the programme as "Some of our Predecessors." Although Dr. Jacobi had already limited himself in the title of his address, he condensed it again when he came to speak, picking out only a few of the worthies whom he had chosen to mention. The men whom he spoke of at some length were James L. Brown, Richard Joseph O'Sullivan, and John C. Peters. To emphasize the ingratitude of the city, more particularly the Board of Education, toward public benefactors, especially physicians, Dr. Jacobi dwelt at some length upon Dr. O'Sullivan's efforts to prevent smallpox among children. "He held the office of Sanitary Inspector," Dr. Jacobi explained, "and during an epidemic of that disease he vaccinated in 1871 40,000 children, not one of whom became afflicted with the disease. Out of gratitude for this," Dr. Jacobi added, looking up from his paper, "the Board of Education abolished the office."

Dr. Jacobi also explained that Dr. O'Sullivan had fought valiantly against cramming the heads of children, against compelling them to sit still for three or four hours at a stretch, and against sending them to school before the age of seven years. "He thought that early enough," Dr. Jacobi added, "and so do I."

As one of the objects to be attained by the society in the twentieth century, Edward D. Fisher strongly emphasized that physicians in the future pay more attention to National and municipal affairs. "In this respect," he said, "we are behind medical men in Germany and France. They are a factor to be reckoned with over there. Here we are very apt to be considered impractical—too much engrossed in our profession to pay much attention to administrative matters generally. In a measure I fear this is true. It ought not to be. The only thing that I can suggest along this line is that we mingle more with men of other professions and callings, become more worldwise."

The interesting facts which John Van Doren Young set forth in his carefully prepared paper on the "Origin and Early History of the Medical Society"—how the pioneers of the society had fought quacks and charlatans in the earliest days—seemed to be humorous enough to make the portraits of the pioneers of the society hanging on the walls smile, to hear this same old subject coming up again—at the centennial anniversary—the same cry: "Down with the quacks!"

The matter came up again through a long report which Champe S. Andrews, the counsel of the society, made of the arrests he had caused during the past year of men who had made money by imposing on ignorance. The report was followed again, as similar reports were followed during the early history of the society, by a resolution denouncing quackery and charlatanry.

The most interesting paper, and because of the nature of the meeting the most important one, was that of Dr. Young, who in a way held the mirror up to the assembled men; showed them what the society was a hundred years and more ago. Some of the things those pioneers did, the things they believed in, medical, surgical, and disciplinary, evoked laughter and applause in spots. It was particularly loud and lasted long when Dr. Young referred to one of the first discussions of the society of which he had been able to find any record, and which took place in June, 1799. "At this meeting," Dr. Young read on, "Dr. Hosack communicated two cases of tetanus cured by the free use of wine. This was discussed by Drs. Bagley, Rodgers, and Hamersley."

Of the history of the Medical Society of the County of New York Dr. Young, who is the Secretary of the society, had this to say:

"In 1794 our society started with eighteen members, to-day on our roll call are over 2,200 names in good standing. We have passed through 112 years of existence with an unbroken record of advance and growth and an unchanged plan of organization. Our power for good has grown because from the very beginning every effort has been made in the elevation of the profession and in the elimination of quackery, the raising of the medical standard, and the improvement of the health of our city."

At some length Dr. Young gave the landmarks of the society during its early days. He explained that he had found a record even of an antecedent medical society which, on Nov. 14, 1794, had been dissolved, and what was then known as the Medical Society of the State of New York formed. This medical society—out of which was developed the present medical society—of the County of New York met for the first time, according to any record which has been found, on Nov. 14, 1794, and six names of men who subsequently appear as the original incorporators of the present Medical Society of the County of New York appear in the records of that meeting. The names are: William Hemersley, John Gamege, A. Bainbridge, John R. B. Rodgers, John Onderdonk, and J. J. De Yong. On Jan. 13, 1795, these men met at the City Hall and held their first election. The men chosen and the offices to which they were elected were as follows: John Carlton, President; Thomas Jones, Vice President; William P. Smith, Treasurer, and John R. B. Rodgers, Secretary.

From the above it appears that it is really the one hundred and twelfth anniversary which the Medical Society of the County of New York ought to celebrate. The hundredth anniversary, however, is based upon the fact that at a meeting on July 8, 1806, the Medical Society of the State of New York having learned that the Albany society had a name the same as its own, decided to change its name to the one it still holds. A law, passed on April 4, 1806, made the change of its name imperative, and thereafter the New York body became known as the county society. The centennial anniversary is based mostly on this fact, the existence of the Medical Society of the County of New York in its strictest sense, name, and all.

In his speech Dr. Young acknowledged having received great assistance in learning of the society's past from volumes presented to the New York Academy of Medicine Dec. 26, 1876. In this volume are preserved the minutes of the Medical Society of the State of New York from Nov. 14, 1794, to July 8, 1806, or to about the time when the name of the local medical society was changed. These minutes show that as early as a meeting in August, 1795, the pioneers of the society were deeply concerned about an epidemic in the city, which Dr. Young spoke of as follows:

"The President read a communication from the Health Committee of the society on the subject of some epidemic fever prevalent in the upper part of the city, and the society agreed to meet each Tuesday evening and report on the progress of the epidemic in their particular practices. At the September meeting the President read a letter from the Governor of the State in relation to this epidemic, and mentions a quarantine having been established between New York and Philadelphia. At this meeting a committee was appointed to investigate the origin and medical treatment of this 'epidemic distemper.'

"Under date of January, 1801, the Treaeurer reported the following balance to the credit of the society—£10 19s. 4d. At this meeting a committtee wae appointed to procure a more satisfactory place for meeting than the City Hall had proved to be, and in April they made the following report: 'The committee appointed to procure a room for the accommodation of the society report that Mr. Lovitt will furnish a convenient room at his hotel in Broadway, together with fire and candle light, for the sum of $2 for each meeting.'"

Dr. Young next read a list of medical fees to which the society pledged itself about this time. They created no end of merriment among the physicians present. Some of those which now seem strangest follow, and a few also which show no marked departure from the practice of those early days. The list of fees was adopted on July 1, 1798, and is, in part, as follows:

"Verbal advice, $5; letter of advice, $10; ordinary visits, $1; blistering plasters, three sizes, from $1.25 to $2; a night visit, $5; a visit at a distance from town, three miles, $1; a visit to Brooklyn, $3; a visit to Powel's Rock, $5; a visit to Staten Island, $10, (the last two charges to be doubled in Winter or in stormy or tempestuous weather;) the first visit in epidemic fevers or eny other disease where personal danger is increased, $5; for dressing a blister, 50 cents to $1; for dressing wounds, from $1 to 2; for applying cupping glasses, $4; bleeding in the arm, $1; bleeding in the foot, $2; bleeding in the jugular vein, $2; opening an artery, $5; emputating a leg, $50; amputating a joint, $100; amputating a finger, $10."

On July 1, 1806, a meeting was held in the front room of the City Hall for the purpose of complying with an act of the Legislature of the State, passed on April 4, preceding, which required medical societies to be incorporated for the purpose of regulating "the practice of physic and surgery in the said State," and at that meeting it was decided not only to have the organization incorporated, but also to change its name. There were 102 names signed to the call for this meeting. Among the physicians known to have attended were these: Nicholas Romayne, James Tillery, Daniel Proudfit, Edward Bainbridge, Wright Post, John Gemage, William Hamersley, and J. J. de Yong. Nicholas Romayne was appointed Chairman of this meeting. He was afterward elected President of the newly organized society. The first meeting of the society with its new name, the Medical Society of the County of New York, was held in the City Hall on Monday, July 7, 1806.

The concluding paragraphs of Dr. Young's address spoke of what has been done by the society for the unification of the profession, and the elimination of quackery, ending in these words:

"Surely the record of 112 years of earnest effort by a profession devoid of hedonistic tendencies, devoted to the advancement of medical science, the elimination of quackery, the destruction of the charlatan, the improvement of the health of the city by the advancement of every sanitary and hygienic method known to science, the dissemination of moral teachings, and the promulgation of all that makes for the good of the community must be followed by benefit both to those who make the effort and those for whom the effort is made."

Many New Stories of West and East by Americans

Will Lillibridge's "Ben Blair" Is a Noteworthy First Book---Emerson Hough's "Womanless Eden"---A Story of the Copper Mines---Railroads in Romance.

A FIRST book, or that book which first gets through the publisher's sieve, is usually a mixture of intermittent strength, weakness, fresh simplicity, and dull attempts at erudition. Mr. Will Lillibridge's first book, "Ben Blair," (Chicago, McClurg,) is no exception to the almost invariable rule; but that which is strength is so remarkable so long as it is sustained that "Ben Blair" is worthy of consideration among the best productions of the season.

Two-thirds of the novel treat of life on the Dakota plains. Here the author seems to be so completely in his element that he apparently sketches his characters with his eyes shut, and by merely throwing his brush at the canvas produces a vivid picture of the desert and its living, breathing soul.

Two incidents in this part of the story are apt to remain indelibly fixed in the mind after reading—and that is saying much. The first is where Ben Blair, eight years old, digs a grave for his mother, who has been burned in her home by the drunkard who was supposed to be the boy's father. The real father, a neighboring rancher whose wife and child had been enticed from home by Tom Blair, has seen the smoke and driven thirty miles to investigate. The scene between Rankin, "the big man," and the child is powerful—out there on the desert under the wide sky.

"What are you doing?" he asked.
"Digging," replied the boy, resuming his work.
"Digging what?"
"A grave."

Rankin helps the lad in silence. When the charred remains are laid to rest

"Anything you wish to say, Benjamin?"
The lad returned the gaze with equal gravity.
"I don't know of anything, Sir."
The man paused a moment longer.
"Nor I, Ben," he said gently.

Again the spade resumed its work; and the impassive earth returned dully to its former resting place.

The second remarkable picture is the more powerful of the two. It occurs in the splendid chapter called "The Inexorable Trail." Ben takes the trail of Tom Blair over the snowclad desert. The chase lasts for days on horse and then afoot when the animals have succumbed. They meet at last, and Ben chokes Tom Blair into unconsciousness. Then he remembers his sweetheart and a promise, and instead of killing his natural enemy, binds him hand and foot and, himself exhausted, falls asleep on the snow. The drunkard revives, and seeing the young man asleep, tries to move toward him with murderous intent.

Finding himself tied, he curses at the top of his voice. After a long time the youth comes out of his lethargic sleep in the snow. In silence he tears a strip off his blanket, ties up the other's foul mouth, and calmly goes back to sleep again. When the reader has the illusion of the desert of snow around this drama the incident hits hard.

In the latter part of the book, where Ben pursues his prairie-bred girl to New York, the story falls far below the standard established in the beginning. The characters are not sustained, as if the author, like his creations, was floundering in waters that were not thoroughly familiar to him. As a first book, however, Mr. Lillibridge's "Ben Blair" gives high promise of things to come.

A WOMANLESS EDEN.

EMERSON HOUGH, author of "The Mississippi Bubble" and other stories, has a new novel called "Heart's Desire," (Macmillan,) which is described in the sub-title as "the story of a contented town, certain peculiar citizens, and two fortunate lovers." It is, on the whole, a pleasing narrative enough, and may be characterized briefly as a sentimental comedy with a flavor of alkali and an episodic method. Heart's Desire is a 'dobe town somewhere in a valley in the Southwest, a town which bakes in the sun and is happy in the absence of law and womenfolk. The men wear six-shooters except when they are broke, and then the artillery hangs upon pegs behind the door at Uncle Jim Brother's hotel. That is a sign. And Uncle Jim furnishes grub freely till better days. The peculiar citizens are Curley, a cowman; McKinney, a boss cowman, and especially Tom Osby, a freighter who has been married "copious," that is, five or six times—with others.

The fortunate lovers are Dan Anderson, a briefless lawyer in the lawless town, which hasn't so much as a magistrate's court to curse itself withal, and Constance, daughter of a millionaire railway promoter "back East." Dan Anderson is a Princeton man, and has known Constance in her Eastern setting. But for the purposes of the story Constance comes West to Heart's Desire and brings a railway and civilization with her. That sounds familiar enough—but the story doesn't follow quite the conventional lines, and in so far as it does not, and for a certain dramatic and vernacular charm belonging to parts of it, as well as for the poetical notions of the author, which shine glamourously through it, it will reward the reader. The idea of the womanless, lawless, and sinless Arcadia has somehow a rather strong appeal, and when the woman comes into it and spoils it, she appeals also.

True, the strong men of their hands who dwell and dream in Heart's Desire are men made with pen and ink, but they represent a phase at least of the man made of flesh and blood. The talk of them and the pose of them is the talk and the pose which clever writers about the same sort of edge of the world places have long ago made familiar—but both in fiction can undoubtedly be made attractive. The present man gets the atmosphere excellently, even if he blunders now and again in details.

SHORT STORIES.

"THE Wizard's Daughter, and Other Stories," by Margaret Collier Graham, (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.,) include six tales of varying interest and quality in their number. The author displays a pleasing sense of humor in her manner of relating them, but in her longer stories there is a falling off of interest near the close, as though, having accompanied her characters half way, she leaves them in the middle of their journey to grope their own way to the end. The first tale, which gives its title to the book, carries its readers to California. One looks in vain for something to come of the conditions which are described. There is Mr. Dysart, for instance, and the very entertaining and religiously inclined Emeline, his wife; there is young Sidney Palmerston, in California for his health, and engaged to a nice girl in Michigan; there is the professor, a man of erudition and a fanatic determined to make the desert blossom as the rose. He inspires John Dysart with his enthusiasm, and John willingly risks his slim capital in a deal with him. Then enters the professor's daughter upon the scene, and one has a hazy, impressionistic idea of a sort of mannish girl with honest eyes and a blue serge coat. And in the end the professor proves himself no visionary, and young Sidney falls in love with the daughter, only to get himself in a hopeless tangle, whereupon the author washes her hands of the entire affair and leaves things in a chaotic state.

There is something of the same method employed in the story of Marg'et Ann and her love for Lloyd Archer. Religious scruples nearly blasted their young lives, but the picture of Marg'et Ann's patient sweetness is a pleasing one. Perhaps the strongest of all the stories is that of "Lib," which is also the shortest. This is the simple tale of a young woman glorified by motherhood, although without benefit of clergy. There is also strength and sweetness in the tale of "For Value Received," and one can scarcely read dry-eyed the last tale of "The Face of the Poor," telling of the simple honesty of an amiable and trusting man and his unexpected reward.

IN NARROWVILLE.

JOE CONE has written a good deal of humorous rural verse, so that one of the characters of his new book, called "The Waybackers," (Colonial Press, Boston,) a country village poet, cannot help being real. But William Williams is just one of the entire population—all more or less real—of Narrowville. What yarns they "swap" around the stove in the grocery store!—all wild and woolly, but always humorous. There are Jim Weeks and "Doc" Bradford, "Cynthy" Jones, Fiddler "Stoky," Hen Billings, "Cap'n" Joe, "Gabe" Perkins—all going in their Sunday suits to Mrs. Peters's "rag bee"—the snow in vast drifts on the hill and the frozen river in the valley.

There's the picture and here's the book. The rest of the scenes need not be described. The love story is not the attraction, although it is very human. Uncle Ezra, although the central character, is by no means the best drawn. In its entirety "The Waybackers" is not remarkable, but it is true to life. And the line drawings of Eliot Keen complete the illusion of Narrowville and its folks.

TALE OF A RAILROAD.

MR. SAMUEL MERWIN in "The Roadbuilders," (the Macmillan Company,) has written a story covering 313 pages wherein not a woman figures. It is a tale probably designed solely for masculine readers; at any rate, few women will find it of breathless interest, albeit it is a well-told, strongly presented account of the trials and hardships which beset a little party of men who undertook to build the extension to the S. and W. R. R., actually the Sherman and Western, but more commonly known as the "Shaky and Windy." The book is filled with the argot of the railroads; there are sharp pictures of crazy panics among the men; of strategy carefully planned to meet strategy; of the incessant toil, the water famines, and the thousand and one other things that come within the work of engineers sent West to lay the rails of a great railroad.

All these many sides of the story Mr. Merwin touches upon with a strong virility. Paul Carhart is a man among men; the reader himself falls under the spell of that quiet, spectacled figure as the author presents him. Indeed, young Van of the imaginative eyes and the square chin, who knew how to handle men, although he doubted his own ability; Old Van, his brother, of the uncontrollable temper; Tiffany, the chief engineer; Peet, the man of double dealings, and all the others down to Jack Flagg, the vindictive cook, and Charlie, the heroic substitute, are all big, brawny, rough-clad heroes who present a refreshing contrast to the tailorish types which fill most of the novels which come to hand.

LAKE SUPERIOR MINERS.

"WHERE Copper Was King" (Small, Maynard) is a story made of the materials found in the early days of copper mining in the Lake Superior country. On the whole, the material is better than the fiction, but the story, if formless, is nevertheless readable. The author declares in a preface that so far as he knows nothing has been done before toward placing on record "the characteristic scenes and incidents" of the time and region, and he says his characters are real characters. The narrative follows the fortunes of a young college graduate from New England who comes to the mines in a lesser engineering capacity and rises to be Superintendent. As the reader explores the galleries and levels and shafts of the Old Wisconsin with the young man and an older engineer, he must climb ladders, (for as yet there are no passenger lifts,) and the descriptions of all these things are evidently first hand and authentic. The incidents include minor accidents, a fishing expedition, a strike, a political gathering, a disastrous collision between two lake steamers, and a mine fire, with a thrilling rescue from underground, inspired and led by the heroine. There is a night watch, too, with a dead body, and the weather so cold that the nails in the weatherboarding of the house are popping out at intervals with a noise like pistol shots, besides a comic militia display and a comic Irishman, and an ill-conditioned pony. These incidents quite obscure the romance upon which they are strung together—a romance which the author seems to have left purposely in the background.

A TRAVESTY OF HORNUNG.

IT was Jerome K. Jerome who said, though perhaps some one else may have previously said it, that "humor is not English or American; it is universal. A thing is funny or it is not funny, and that's all there is to it." Whether Mr. Jerome is an expert witness in this matter the American people know. One thing is certain, however; although Mr. Bangs's parody on Hornung's "Raffles," "Mrs. Raffles," (Harper,) relates to Newport, Mrs. Gaster, Mrs. Rockerbilt, and Tommy Dare, the humor is of the universal sort and ought to appeal to all English-speaking people, whether or not they are able to place Tommy Dare. Mr. Raffles, you see, died—"killed, as you may remember, at the battle of Spion Kop"—and his widow, the beautiful Henriette, occupies a villa at Newport. She pays the rent by selling the landlord's furniture. Bunny, who, next to "my friend Watson," is the biggest blockhead of recent creation, learning that Mrs. Raffles is at Newport, upsets the collection plate in a Fifth Avenue church. He helps to collect the spilled offerings, profusely apologizing as he does so. Later he travels to Newport in good style and enters the service of Mrs. A. J. Raffles as a butler.

The adventures that follow are amusing, ingeniously worked, and interestingly told. Perhaps the most amusing is where Bunny visits Andrew Carnegie, hoping to get the price of a library for a mythical village.

"I wasn't thinking of giving away any more libraries this year," says Mr. Carnegie. "I am giving away lakes for a change. If you want a nice artifical lake, now—"

However, Mr. Carnegie, like Mrs. Gaster and Mrs. Gushington-Andrews, are fleeced. In the end Mrs. Raffles elopes with Mr. Constant Scrappe, her landlord, and Bunny is again left alone in the world.

A WICKED GHOST.

"STORK'S NEST," by J. Breckinridge Ellis, (Moffat, Yard & Co.,) is constructed after the good old-fashioned manner of stories wherein a very wicked villain competes with an unusually gentlemanly hero for the affections of the beautiful heroine. In this particular story the villain, Bije Stork, is certainly a very black character, and his twin brother Si is only a shade less black. To the farm of these two men comes Benton Cabot, the son of an old companion of the Storks in civil war times. Benton seeks health and strength in farm work, but he finds a number of adventures as well. His first experience in the country is the unusual one of meeting a ghost. The spirit of Hezzie Whitlick, ten years or more deceased, has developed the uncanny habit of walking the country and accosting his late neighbors. He waylays Benton and leaves the young man strangely mystified. Throughout the story this uneasy spirit of the late Hezzie hovers about the unfortunate Benton, also about his own orphaned son, Jim Whitlick, who had been apprenticed to the Storks, and who seems to have been a particular prey of the ghost of his dead father.

Emmy Garret, a youthful Venus who has aspirations to become a "person" in order to dazzle certain relatives of her dead mother in St. Louis whom she had never met, but who had disinherited her mother, is discovered when the story opens, a rustic and illiterate vision of loveliness feeding chickens. Emmy is the bone of contention between the wicked Bije and the virtuous Benton. For her sake—because Emmy had almost decided to marry Bije for his money in order to expedite the transformation into a "person"—Benton hounds the villain until he discovers many things. He discovers his awful cruelty to the orphaned Jim; his connection with Hezzie's restless spirit; his sinister influence over his half-starved sister-in-law; his deception of the trusting Emmy herself, and many other acts of villainy answerable to the law.

There is considerable quick shooting in the book, also freshets and quicksand help to complicate the dangers and excitements, but in the end we are led to believe that the good are rewarded and the wicked punished as they should be.

FISHING IN FRISCO BAY.

IN "Tales of the Fish Patrol," (Macmillan,) a volume of new stories, Jack London strikes a subject which has been little used, and strikes it with no uncertain vigor. San Francisco Bay is the scene, and fishermen of all nations, and, as is usual in such conglomeration, of no law, provide plenty of work for the fish patrolmen, and consequent action in the narratives. A peep into the junks of Chinese shrimp fishers; the trapping of a giant Greek fisher outlaw; a night raid upon oyster pirates, and other adventures hold the interest from start to finish. Here and there Mr. London waxes a little overtechnical in the handling of his vessel, but in some mysterious way he leaves the impression that it is all right and that both he and the reader have pulled through a naval engagement which was quite exciting while it lasted. As usual, the author has imbued his characters with blood, which imparts some of its heat and surge to the reader's own veins. The stories, by the way, are particularly free from anything that is repulsive. To write a realistic story of virile-hearted, virile-tongued men and avoid the repulsive is in itself quite an accomplishment, in which even Jack London has not always succeeded.

GOOD IN SPITE OF "HEREDITY."

ALL the characters in "The Coming of the Tide," by Margaret Sherwood, (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.,) seem to be suffering from a disease called heredity. Frances Wilmot has it. Her mother having been a poet nipped in the bud by marriage, the daughter hears music in the sea, sees beauty in the flowers, and so on. Paul Warren, come of a line of ancestors who were theologists, drunkards, sportsmen, philosophers, and he, himself, a composite of them all, retires from the world and worries about himself. Uncle Peter, who blames his own fondness for the sideboard to the habits of his great-great-grandfather, his hot temper to a cousin of an uncle seven times removed, is an original creation, and particularly amusing, inasmuch as he turns out to be the son of the head gardener.

The heredity side of the story is a little wearisome, but one cannot help being completely charmed by the quaint, colorful style employed by Margaret Sherwood. Her descriptions of the sea and nature ashore are no less charming than the heroine, Frances Wilmot. The love story also had this whimsical prettiness about it. When the recluse had his eyes opened by the touch of love and Frances, it happened like this:

"Living, no!" she said, with a little stamp. "Thinking, groping, yes. Please shut your eyes."

He did so.

"What do you hear?"

"Bees and soft waves, and a voice that is like music."

"What do you see? Keep your eyes shut."

"A shimmer of blue and green, with the flowers of the garden resting against it; and what else I see I shall not tell."

The girl nodded with satisfaction.

"You are coming to your senses, Ghost."

Hamlet: An Old Play in a New Garb; or, An Adventure in Jersey City

HORATIO READING HAMLET'S LETTERS.

OWING to the fact that my name is identical with that of the writer of Shakespeare's plays, I have occasionally been invited by the directors of church sociables to interpret dialogues from said plays, possibly for the reason that the gentle shade of my supposed ancestor might direct my interpretation, if not inspire my articulation. The other night they sent for me from Rutherford, New Jersey. I was late in getting the message. I missed both boat and train, and found myself practically stranded in Jersey City—for I had forgotten my favorite edition of "Hamlet," from which I was to read.

Of course I was acquainted with the entire text, and needed no prompter. Yet experience has taught me that it is well to have the book near by in case the applause, which I have not infrequently listened to, should be so tumultuous as to disconcert me for the moment.

The next train left Jersey City for Rutherford in ten minutes. On a side street I noticed a shop where antiquated books were sold. I rushed in.

"Have you a copy of 'Hamlet'?" I feverishly inquired of the blear-eyed old man who emerged from behind the counter.

He was about to explain, to expatiate, but I interrupted him with: "I simply want the text—just 'Hamlet'—a paper cover if you have it—25 cents? Thanks." And I ran from the shop, and was just in time to catch the train as it was moving out of the station.

Although, as I have stated, I am perfectly familiar with the play, I had no sooner seated myself in the train than I thought it might be well to run over the passages which I was later to read before the Ladies' Parochial Aid Society. I turned to the famous soliloquy, when the following met my startled gaze:

Ham. To be or not to be (that is the question)
Relieved of an attack of indigestion!
The fact is I am sadly out of tune.
And if some change don't take place very soon
I am determined [takes out a revolver] something rash
To do.
And rid myself of this existence. [Looks into muzzle.]
Whew!
It don't look pleasant. [Puts it up.] I think not just yet—
A little longer I'll contrive to fret.
It isn't manly, though 'tis very easy
To shoot yourself if everything don't please ye;
But when all earthly troubles thus you've ended
And gone elsewhere—is then the matter mended?
We can't be certain, and that very doubt
Keeps very many men from putting out
The lamp of life,
For who, think you, would bear
The insolence of duns, the rich man's stare,
The pangs of toothache, and the mail's delay,
That always happens when one's love's away.
And he's a little anxious—the distress
Of finding the last shirt quite buttoniess,
A stupid servant or a sulky wife,
And all the other miseries of life.
When such annoyances he might get rid of [Takes out the revolver again.]
If he'd pull this and blow his stupid head off.
But, as I said before, it is the dread
Of what comes after death that saves his head!

\+ \+ \+

After pinching myself several times and being impressively interrogated by the conductor for my ticket, I decided that I was neither asleep nor—but evidently under "some prodigious ban of excommunication," and I feverishly sought the dialogue between Polonius and his son, but with this monstrous humiliating result:

Pol. Still here, Laertes! This is wrong, my son;
The bell has rung, I pray you hasten on;
I've paid your passage, and it would be hard
If you should be too late to get on board.
I'm grieved 'tis late, as I had much to say
In shape of counsel ere you went away.
I've given you the money that you ought
To spend, but should you happen to get short
Don't borrow of your friends, but draw on me—

HAMLET MORALIZING TO HORATIO.

LAERTES EMBARKING FOR FRANCE.

I trust you'll draw it mild—but we shall see.
I've nothing more to say about your spending
Or borrowing, but one word as to lending:
I charge you not to do it, for depend
On it, you'll see no more of that same friend!
Dress rich but plain, wear nothing that is fancy;
I hate to see a man look like Mies Nancy.
If in a row they raise a barricade,
Just let them fight it out without your aid.
This above all: Don't let small things distress you.
A pleasant voyage, my son; good-bye! God bless you!

Laertes. Well, Sir, good-bye! Ophelia, recollect
What I have said, and on it pray reflect. [Exit.]

Pol. They say Lord Hamlet's rather sweet on you,
And you like him, Ophelia—is this true?

Ophelia. Yes, father dear, he's offered me his hand,
And says he'll make me Princess of this land."

Pol. I've seen a good deal of the world, and know
That these young men most anything will vow;
A sad proclivity they've to deceive,
And girls are foolish any to believe.
Tell him to make you then at once his bride,
And if he hesitates, why let him slide! [Exeunt.]

\+ \+ \+

Still more anxiously did I turn to that famous dialogue between Prince Hamlet and his ghostly father. And it was in this guise and with these words that the ghost entered—heaven save the mark!

Ghost. That I'm your father's ghost,
As you have said, tis true,
And I have come to get
A chance to speak to you.
The night is disappearing,
The morn will soon be breaking,
And I shall have to leave
Before the world is waking.

That I was a good husband
You know as well as I do;
I never served your mother
Ae Aeneas did Queen Dido.
To my treatment and behavior
She could make no objection,
But still I soon found out
That I hadn't her affection.

If I went out to walk
My unfraternal brother
Would sneak into the house
And make love to your mother.
The world knows that your uncle
Could not compare with me,
But who can any reason
In a woman's fancy see?

While I was in my garden
Sleeping off a dizziness
He poured poison in my ear
That quickly did my business.
Of such a wicked crime
The like was never seen;
He took from me at once
My life and crown and Queen.

So now you know the worst,
Act just as you've a mind—
To let him go unpunished
I hope you're not inclined.
The glow worm 'gins to pale
His ineffectual fire,
And that's a gentle hint
'Tis time I should retire. [Exit.]

\+ \+ \+

And, still further turning the pages, I found to my horror Hamlet's mother, the stately Gertrude, dancing a jig and singing a song that would not be tolerated in the most prosperous days of Black Friars'. I sought in vain for a passage, a line, a sentence even that had been penned by my illustrious namesake. It had all been altered, changed, obliterated. Even the famous duel scene was reduced to a mock combat that suggested the fight between Harlequin and Pierrot. Oh,

HORATIO AND MARCELLUS ENDEAVORING TO RESTRAIN HAMLET.

HAMLET SOLILOQUIZING.

the infamy of it all! But surely, I said to myself, as I rapidly turned to the back of the book, the end at least must be dramatic and pathetic. The base plagiarizer would never dare to tamper with Ophelia, even if he did bring Hamlet to life through a patent medicine. But even this small grain of artistic comfort was denied me, for Ophelia, confessing she'd only "made believe death," skips in upon the scene singing a song to the air of "Oh, Susannah":

Oph. I had a most delightful dream—I think 'twas
Thursday night;
I dreamed, in spite of all my grief, that things would turn out right,
That Hamlet would come back restored from good old
England's strand,
And I should be his Queen, and rule with him throughout the land.
(Chorus.) So, dear ladies, don't you weep for me;
I'm very happy now, and soon I'll be a Queen, you see.
Ham. That her sweet dream has come to pass is really quite delightful,
For at one time the aspect of affairs was truly frightful.
But still I thought that soon or late as matters are they would be,
And Virtue'd be victorious, as Virtue always should be.
(Chorus.) So, dear public, don't you grieve for me;
I'm King, and dear Ophelia's to be my Queen, you see!

\+ \+ \+

Could any self-respecting student and interpreter of those great plays which are historically associated with the name of Shakespeare bear more? I turned to the tattered fly-leaf of the volume, and there read the following legend: "Hamlet, Prince of Denmark. By George Edward Rice. Boston: Ticknor, Reed & Fields. 1853." To think that the worthy proprietors of the famous Old Corner Bookstore could have placed their imprint upon such a monstrosity!

I inclose these passages, together with sundry illustrations, in order to prevent other sincere students of "Hamlet" from committing the blunder that was mine, particularly if they be obliged to look for their favorite play in Jersey City.

I am happy to say that one of the ladies of the Parochial Aid Society loaned me a copy of the true text, from which I read passages in a manner which, I am told, was eminently satisfactory. FRANCIS BACON.

A Day with John Burroughs at Slabsides

His Friend President Roosevelt Gave Him Standing Among His Neighbors, but Disappointed Him in Hurrying Russia and Japan to Peace---Views on the Evolution of Man.

GEOGRAPHIES say that West Park-on-the-Hudson is seventy-eight miles away. But no array of figures can bridge the actual distence between Broadway and Slabsides, the unique cabin home of John Burroughs, critic, esseyist, poet, philosopher, and friend of the bees and birds, also of Walt Whitman and President Roosevelt.

After a special story campaign among the bulls and bears and sundry lions of lucre it was a startling metamorphosis to find one's self chatting quietly with the nature poet of the Hudson among his books and woodland companions. A tap on his study door—the study being a tan-bark structure perched on a brow of hill overlooking the river just above Poughksepsie—was answered by a genial-eyed, gray-heired, young-looking man of sixty-eight, whose ruddy complexion and youthful vigor conspired to establish an alibi. Shed the petriarchal beard and iron just a few tell-tele lines from the face and John Burroughs is a repudiation of age, a vindication of the simple life. Below him were his vineyards, directly across the river were his friends, the Frederick Vanderbilts; above him, further up the slope, was his substantial stone residence, Riverby. Buried some two miles off in the woods was Slabsides, his Winter workshop, where the right sort of pauper and the right sort of President are equally welcome.

Resuming a comfortable chair in the sun end motioning the City Man toward another, the genial philosopher began wondering why any one should venture three hours away from town on such a mission. Had it been simply to visit the woods and their folk, to escape from the hurly-burly, the journey might have been justified, but otherwise—a humorous twinkle shone in the kindly gray-blue eyes as he pursued reminiscently: "People—even we democratic Americans—have diverse idees of values, you know. I have scores of friends—lots of them in our neighborhood—who seem fond of me, as I am of them, but who are rather vague about my way of life, my work. When my good friend, the President, and his wife visited me not long ago, for example, the effect on some of the people roundebout was rather absorbing as a study. Not caring much themselves about my sort of work, they were no doubt surprised at the honor done me and my modest home here, but," with a subdued chuckle, "after that visit of the President several hats and caps never before touched have been lifted ostentatiously to me along the road.

"Yes," he presently responded to an interrogation, "I am a great admirer of President Roosevelt. In fact, though it may seem peradoxical, he has done but one thing that has disappointed me, and that was his intervention between Japan and Russia."

Noting an expression of surprise, the speaker continued: "The President, by bringing the Russo-Japanese war to a close, hes reduced by one my means of entertainment. And diversions grow few and fewer as one ages. That does seem barberous, terribly blood-thirsty and ferocious, but," seriously, "I believe it would have been better to pay the price of a more protracted war in order to have a general house cleaning in Russia. I believe, in other words, that the Russian autocracy would have been overthrown and a more progressive and enlightened government built upon the ruins. So far as can be observed from here," glancing over the river and up the hill, "the Russian masses are no better off than they were when the Czar Paul informed a mediaeval courtier that he (the courtier) was the only person of importance in Russia, and that he was important only so long as the Czar was addressing him. Volumes might be written about Russian conditions without revealing as vividly as that single utterance the real matter with Russia to-day," emphatically; "and hence my regret over the sudden ending of the war before Russia was thoroughly beeten," he aeseverated.

"Personally," continuing, "my regret is slightly tinged with selfishness, no doubt, for, now thet peace hes been established, there is not much in the newspapers for me; probably," with a smile, "because it requires loud news to reach so far into the woods.

"There was a time when big type attracted and deluded me, but big type does not say any more than small type—does not say as much, in fact, for went of space to say it in. Yes," he pursued, "some of our contemporary journels remind me of certain modern poets end novelists who are wonderful phrase masons, but whose meaning you can hardly hear for the din of words, the general clatter of verbal trowels."

"Speaking of modern literature," was interposed, "what is your opinion of contemporary American writers? Is the great American novel about due?"

"Our writers are writing correctly, adroitly," with some hesitation, "but unless I am too far away to see it they do not say much worth remembering. Yet we cannot have everything. We cannot expect to have great genluses in art when most of our talent and genius have a distinctly material bent. We—most of us—are too wholly absorbed in scrambling for dollars to do much else except spend them, and covet more and always more.

"I suppose a good many people find it hard to understand how any sane person could prefer to live up here rather than in the city, where the greater currents of thought and activity converge. But the rural life is the only satisfactory one for me. New York, with its rush and roar, with its froth and fury, is a modern Sodom when viewed from here. And all its sound and fury signify nothing to me. Here every sound has its meaning."

The call of an insistent bell ringing at Riverby, upon the hill, offered a sudden interruption. "Yes, every sound has its meaning," was his smiling reiteration, "and that is a signal from my wife."

Returning presently to the rustic study the master of Riverby and Slabsides continued: "But so long as materialism dominates our ambitions and ideals there is small chance of us producing supreme works of art, such as the great American novel must necessarily be."

"Whom would you name as the greatest writer America has thus far produced?" was asked.

"Whitman," was the prompt reply. "He was, is the greatest all-round force in our literature—the mountain. All others are foothills compared with him, with the possible exception of Emeraon. Yes, I knew Emerson, met him several times, and admire his genius without stint. But, fine as it is, it never measures up to the universality of Whitman. Emerson wes all mind, transcendental. Whitman is a combination of everything—a greatly humen genius, such as supremacy always is. Emerson never met anybody without weighing him in the balance, without asking himself, consciously or unconsciously, what the other could teach him. On the contrary, Whitman liked men for themselves rather than for their knowledge."

"Which of them has influenced you most, if at all?" was ventured.

"Of course it is impossible to have escaped their influence entirely," was the frank reply, "and I suppose both hed a hand in shaping my thought and expression. As a young man, just beginning to write, my first essay betrayed the Emersonian influence so strongly that Lowell, then editing The Atlantic, fancied it was a plagiarism. Magazins articles were not signed in The Atlantic then, and when he had accepted and printed it, after satisfying himself of its originality, it was often ascribed to Emerson. In fact Poole, in his periodical index, credited Emerson with being its author. So you see even the elect were deceived. But the controversy awakened me to the worthlessness of mimicry and started me to hewing out a road for myself. Whitman, on the other hand, merely broadened my outlook by mentally taking me up to his level and showing me a vaster universe."

"Do you find women or men most responsive to and appreciative of the best influences in literature?" was the next question.

"Women are, in the main," he decided. "And to my mind this talk of women not being able to vote intelligently is idle. So far as it is possible to forecast, it will be a distinct benefit to us as a people when our women are enfranchised. There is no reason on earth why they should not have the privilege of the ballot. It would create in them an interest in public questions, and by so doing, by broadening their horizons, would make them better wives and mothers without in the least destroying their femininity. And the day is surely coming to pass, is, in my opinion, very near at hand, when equal suffrage will be a rule rather than an exception."

A medley of whistles telling the noon hour, the speaker arose and led the way to the house. "A thousand years ago," said he, mounting the hill, "this plateau was a lake. A generation ago it was a marsh. To-day it is a farm." The farm was cleared and planted by himself. Besides an extensive vineyard, vegetables and a quantity of small fruits are raised.

"I used to be a pretty active worker in the vineyard," was added by Mr. Burroughs, "but hard manual labor unfits one for intellectual effort, and I em taking things a bit easier now. As my wife tells me, there is at least one American who will never kill bimself with overwork."

Dinner over, a walk through the woods to Slabsides was proposed, during which the experienced guide, with a direction here and an explanation there, eo interpreted the landscape that it blossomed with beauty, and the solitude became populous with life. Every flower and leaf had a lesson to teach, every woodnote had its history.

"Why, bless me, there is a belated bobolink!" might be his ejaculation. "Hear him going on:

Be true to me, Clary; be true to me, Clary;
Clery, kick your slipper, kick your slipper.
Temperance. Temperance.

"He is our best chorister," was vouchsafed. "He is all earnestness and sincerity, as contrasted with that insufferable poseur, the catbird. And he is absolutely original, no mimicking Emerson with him; the bobolink is really so much himself that he defies imitation."

"Is there any suggestion of aristocracy among the birds and lower animale?" was esked.

"No, if we overlook their mating season, when there is considerable strutting done. Nothing, however, that we find in them compares with our silly girls who yearn and sigh for titles."

"You are skeptical about the intelligence attributed to the lower animals by Seton, Long, and other animal story writers?"

"Yes, it is misleading to trick out exaggeration in the name of truth," he answered, as we entered Slebsides, a picturesque spruce hand-made cabin built by its owner. A fragrance of wild wood pervades the interior when cooking is not in progress. The main floor consists of one rambling room divided into sections, but without any dividing walls. A bed of birch limbs is built on one side, the library, parlor, kitchen, and dining room adjoining it. Upstairs are two bedrooms occasionally occupied by guests.

"The other day," continued Mr. Burroughs, "several California schoolchildren wrote to ask if birds really have sense, as some of the imeginative biographers declare. One little girl said, in asking the question, that she wented to be the first one to know. My belief is that we ourselves herdly have sense enough to know just how much sense the animals do have—whether it is very superior, for instance, to the instinct or natural prompting of the bean stalk. Study a bean stalk and you will discover in it a sort of perversity or depravity that suggests a deliberate choice. Each season, among my dozen or more hills of bean poles, there are usuelly two or three low-minded plants that will not climb the poles, but go groveling upon the ground, wandering off among the potato vines or cucumbers, departing utterly from the traditions of their race, becoming shiftless and vagrant. Just like some people—yes.

"Lift them up and wind them around the poles and they rarely etay—those vines. In some way they seem to get a wrong start in life, or else are degenerate from the first. No parallel to this exists among the wild creatures. And why is ths bean so? As we are aware, the lima bean is of South American origin, and there, it seems, beans go the other way around the pole, that is, from right to left. Brought north it takes them some time to learn the new way, and a few of them are always backsliding, deperting from the new way and vaguely seeking the old. Not finding it they gradually become confirmed vagabonds.

"Some of thess matters are discussed in my forthcoming book on the ways of neture, and the conclusion—mine—is thet birde and animals probably think without knowing what they think, have, in other words, no self-consciousness.

"President Roosevelt, by the way, wrote me the other day about a bear he saw out West. It was stalking along with a dead kid in its forepaws when suddenly the bear stumbled and sprawled headlong. What did bruin do in his anger but give the poor lifeless kid an unmerciful cuffing, exactly like a boy, who, when hurt by an inanimate object, often will visit his vengeence upon it."

"In your animal studies have you found any corroboration of the Darwinian theory?"

"No; we may have come up through some such avenue, but men was never a monkey, and e monkey will never be a man, if we are to judge from reason and careful observation. It is, of course, a baffling problem, but there ere some of us who lean to the conviction that man, in evolving from the animal, brought that animal along with him."

"And whither, in your opinion, do such speculations tend?" was suggested.

"In one way," he replied, "the tendency is to loosen our grip on accepted religious teachings. We ere in an age of doubt and questioning—an age in some ways comparable to the Roman era on the induction of Christianity, but with this difference; We have science as a saving grace."

The conversation ehifting from the abstrict to the concrete, in reply to a question as to his methods of work the owner of Slabsides said that most of his essays were written in his cabin workshop during the Winter months. His chestnut burrs, he volunteered, did not open until the frost. Summer, in other words, was his fallow season. He seldom wrote, he added, more than three or four hours a day, and then he wrote only what he pleased and when he pleased.

Occasionally an editor would send him some photographs, reminiscently, with a request for an article. But, continuing, he never could write up to photographs. It was like sending a bunghole to a cooper with a request that a barrel be built around it.

"Are you bothered much by autograph seekers?" suggested the visitor.

"Not bothered, exactly," he answered, "but it is surprising how many people are given to making such requests. It always gives me pleasure to reepond to them, provided the applicant fulfills two conditions—incloses return postage and spells my name correctly. It is sometimes puzzling to cipher out the sort of person who addressee me as Burrows, for instance. What does he or she want with my autogreph, do you suppose—to catch birds with?" was the chuckling query.

Leading the wey back through the woods, Mr. Burroughs was reminded by the gathering dusk of a curious verse which Jay Gould had written when they were schoolmates at Roxbury, N. Y. He explained that the teacher had set him the task of writing an original verse of a dozen linee, and that he had vainly racked his brain over the composition, until young Gould, seated on the same bench, came to his rescue with the following:

Time is flying past,
Night is coming fast.
I minus two,
As you all know.
But what is more,
I must hand o'er
Twelve lines by night
Or stay and write.
Just eight I've got,
But that is not Enough by four.
So here is twelve
With this one more.

"It is strange," commented the Good Gray Naturalist, at the parting of the ways, "how that doggerel has remained in my memory, which is a poor one. What the third line means is quite beyond human comprehension. But so are a good many other things in this curious earth-country," he murmured softly in conclusion.

NOVEMBER AN INTERESTING MONTH FOR STAR-GAZING

NOVEMBER is an interesting month for star gazing, particularly if one can reinforce the naked eye with an opera glass, or, better still, a field glass of somewhat greater power. About 9 o'clock throughout the month some of the finest of the constellations are above the horizon, while over us end about us is a host of smeller objects of singuinr brilliancy end interesting ae a study.

The hunters who have their innings about this time were assigned Sagittarius as their patron among the starry constellations. In the long, long ago this group was figured as a satyr, hut afterward was changed to a centaur, not, however, to be confounded with the larger Centaurius, far away to the south. This group is extremely ancient, as it was an object of worship in China some thousands of years before the present era.

The steller glories in Novemiher will be abundant and brilliant, and will furnish additional cause for us to wonder at, so much being known of things so very far away from us, and with what astonishing accuracy the astronomer can measure the distance in miles to some of the stars, numbers of miles when written out far too big, and too filled with ciphers to be impressive. On a clear moonlight night we are told that only about 2,000 stars can be seen by the unaided eye. The distance to some of these is held to be so tremendous that another unit of meesurement has been found more convenient for its expression. This unit is the measurement of the velocity of light, which is at the rate of 180,000 miles per second. Even with this unit we find extraordinary results, and that the light of our nearest star requires over four years to reach us. The brilliant Sirius is far enough awey to require a period of eight years in which to send us notice of any change. The pole star takes forty-eight years, while Arcturus, another of our familiar stellar friends, extends this period to 150 years.

This is one of the two months in which meteors are plentiful, August being the other month. It has been supposed that the entire solar system is traversed by innumerable streams of meteors, probably varying in dimensions from the size of peas to that of baseballs, while here and there are records of meteorites reaching almost a ton in weight. The numbers of these small bodies that cross the earth's orbit must be enormous, although but a very small percentage is disclosed to our view.

The speed at which the sun travels toward the far southern point in his career perceptibly slackens in November, there being but seven degrees increase in southerly declination for the month. The day, however, is now almost six hours shorter than it was in June at the time of the Summer solstice, a fact that becomes far too apparent as the darkness of evening overtakes us at an earlier hour on succeeding evenings.

The moon's phases for the month begin on the 3d, when it will be a first quartering, followed on the 12th by the full moon, on the 19th by the last quartering, and on the 26th by the new moon. The planetary conjunctions in which the moon is a conspicous figure begin on the 2d with a not very close meeting between Mars and Luna. Three days later Saturn has a much more cordial meeting with our satellite. Jupiter's turn comes on the 13th and Neptune's on the 16th, neither of which are conspicuously striking. On the 24th Sirius affords a somewhat more spectacular picture, but even then too much blue sky intervenes for scenic display. Mercury is rather too pale on the 28th to contribute greatly to our enjoyment. The list closes on the 28th, when Uranus's turn comes to receive a visit; but as we are denied a look at the planet, the fact of its having a meeting with the moon must be taken for granted.

To Jupiter belongs the first position for the month, for on the 24th he will be in opposition, rising in the east as the sun sinks to rest in the opposite portion of the horizon. At this time the planet is at its largest for the year, and even now is a beautiful object to look upon throughout the evening. Jupiter is half as large again as he was in April, and the favorable location for observation in which he is now placed makes him appear much larger and far more brilliant. He comes as a challenger for first place in the starry firmament, which he can readily gain, as he has no very decided opponents, having left Venus some time ago in the morning skies as the complete ruler, without fear of anybody supplanting her in control.

Mars is an evening star, and follows about four and a half hours in the sun's wake. Were it not for the reddish color of this warlike veteran of the starry battalions we should have considerable difficulty in ascertaining his exact whereabouts. He is now hardly more than a third the size he was in May, and continues to shrink throughout the remainder of the year. He is in the constellation of the Archer, which for one of his warlike propensities seems quite a suitable abiding place.

Saturn is in conjunction with the moon some three days after Mars and will afford the most pleasurable meeting for the month. The planet is quite of good size, and its pale serene light, only pale in comparison to some of its more dazzling brothers, is most pleaeing to gaze upon. Saturn is some six hours ahead of Jupiter, in its progress along the heavenly arch and serves to mark the general path to be followed leter by its giant brother. It will be well toward midnight before this ring-bedecked one of the brotherhood drops from view in the western section of the heavens.

Neptune is so very far out of sight that he plays an unimportant part in the annals of interest to the non-professional. Could we but see him as pleinly as we do the others, his fece would be of greatest interest, as we are told much of his greatness and more or less of his beauty by those who view him through powerful telescopes. He is to be found in the constellation of the Twins, whose chief brilliants, Castor and Pollux, render it quite easy for us to find at such times when the group is above the horizon. It is unfortunate that when in conjunction with the moon there is so much space between the two that the latter does not serve to more exactly indicate the position of the former.

Venus begins the month by rising about two hours before Old Sol, and eo is the morning star. She is slowly drawing in toward conjunction with the sun, but will not reach that point before the close of the year. To early risers this beautiful queen of the morning sky will still prove an object of interest, although her stay in the field of view is growing steadily less. It is ever an appealing sight when the moon and the Fair Ons are in each other's neighborhood, and although at their meeting on the 25th of this month there is rather too great an interval between the two, it will probably pay to give it more than a passing glance. Besides this meeting with the moon, Venus does not in November take part in any other tableau.

Mercury about the 20th will be visible for several nights, for on the 26th he reaches the length of his tether that holds him on the eastern side of the sun, and for a short while after the sun sets we can find him close to the western horizon. At this time this most elusive of the brotherhood shines like one of the fixed stars; and to those accustomed to looking at that par of the sky and not finding anything the very fact of the space being taken will call attention to the fact of a stranger being there. This is the last chance for seeing Mercury this year.

Uranus brings up the rear this time, and has a meeting with the moon on the 28th, almost close enough to admit of the moon's telling us where to look for the planet. We also have to look in the constellation of Sagittarius to find Uranus. As there are no particularly conspicuous stars in the immediate vicinity, it is only a very diligent hunt and a clear idea of the arrangement of the stars in that group that will serve for future reference in finding it.

Eternal Vigilance in Fluid Form

"DAY before yesterday," said the druggist, "a German woman came into my store and remarked that she had read of an infallible remedy for a certain well-known household pest, and handing me a clipping from a German newspaper published in New York, inquired if the stuff was dispensed in liquid or powder form, and how much it would cost.

"I saw that she had underlined certain words of the clipping, and on reading the whole article I found that the writer of the Germau paper hae charge of the question and anewer column had givsn all the advice of which he was possessed, but evidently did not himself place much reliance upon the usual remedies, and had wound up his reply in a facetious way, saying in quotation marks that the very best thing to use was 'eternal vigilance,' the quotation being printed in English.

"I told her 'eternal vigilance' was a fluid which cost 25 cents, and gave her some corrosive sublimate and benzine."

New York's Musical Public Increasing Rapidly

That Impresarios and Concert Managers Realize the Growing Demand for More Musical Entertainments Is Shown by the Swelling List of the Coming Season's Announcements.

AS the musical public of New York looks toward the opening of the musical season, which begins this week, it may descry signs of tremendous energy and activity. The plans already perfected and put forward for the coming season assure more orchestral music, more choral music, more chamber music, more performances by visiting and local virtuosos, and, in all probability, more opera than ever before. The purveyors of all this music have, of course, made their plans in the expectation that New York will be able to absorb, if not assimilate, it all. Perhaps some of them will be disappointed; but at any rate it seems clear that in the estimation of those best qualified to judge the New York public for music is increasing continually year by year.

It seems unquestionable that it is, and it would also seem to be a natural and necessary result of the enormous annual growth of the population of the city that a certain percentage of the added citizens should have a taste for music and a disposition to go to concerts. The enormous amount of money spent for music here, week by week, in the course of the Winter, might well employ the attention of a statistician of art, if there is such a creature. Some figures printed in this column last season suggested it, and showed that there were many days in which New York furnished musical audiences of more than 13,000. It is a vast constituency that supports music in this town, and it is constantly growing.

It is not possible at present—it never is possible at the opening of the season—to give a complete showing of what is promised for this constituency in the next six months. But the most important features of the season have been announced and they may be briefly stated.

The opera season will be seventeen weeks this Winter, which is two weeks more than last season. If Mr. Conried keeps his forces as busy singing and playing as he knows how, which he has achieved in New York alone with seven performances of opera a week, he will considerably surpass all the recent records of the house. Last year 100 performances were given, and in 1899-1900, under Mr. Grau, 102. "Brilliant" the season no doubt will be, and there will be several works not lately in the repertory.

It is in the orchestral concerts that the greatest increase is already assured. The established series will all be kept up: the Philharmonic with its 16, and one extra one; the Boston Symphony with its 10, the Young People's series with its 6, Sam Franko's with its 3. The plans of the New York Symphony Orchestra contemplate a series of 16; the Russian Symphony Orchestra has arranged for three Sunday concerts besides the series of six corresponding to those which it gave last year. The authorities of the People's Symphony concerts, which attracted very large audiences at Carnegie Hall after being compelled to move out of Cooper Union, are ambitiously arranging for three sets of performances, duplicating in Cooper Union and the Grand Central Palace what they give in Carnegie Hall. There will be the usual series of Sunday night concerts with orchestra at the Opera House, 17 in number, and Victor Herbert has already begun a series of popular concerts at the Majestic Theatre to continue Sunday nights for a period not yet limited. The Philadelphia Orchestra has ventured into New York territory and announced one concert.

Here, then, are 94 concerts in more or less regularly established orchestral series, and there will be many more in which solo pianists, violinists, and other instrumentalists will have orchestral "assistance," and in which the orchestral numbers will make up an important part of at least the bulk of the programme.

The regular orchestral concerts will offer much that will engross the attention of music lovers. Public interest in the Philharmonic's plan of importing foreign conductors of note is still active, as is shown by the subscription, which keeps well up to the large record of recent years. Yet the Philharmonic's list of conductors is by no means so distinguished as it was last year and the year before. Scarcely any of them stands in the highest rank. Mr. Safonoff's return is expected, evidently, to be the most popular episode; for him an extra concert has been arranged. The fact that two concerts have been allotted to Mr. Victor Herbert might go to show that foreign conductors were not easily tempted to come over this season. The interesting announcement that Mr. Vincent d'Indy is coming to conduct some concerts for the Boston Orchestra promises some notable programmes. He is not known as a conductor; but as the leader of the young French school of composers who are venturing on new, and, in the view of many, unpromising, paths and exploring untried fields in music, he will have something to say through the orchestra that will assuredly arouse great discussion in New York.

The return of Mr. Weingartner to conduct a number of the New York Symphony Orchestra's concerts will profoundly interest those who were submitted to the spell of his strong and sane personality at his last two visits. And apart from this Mr. Damrosch has chosen some attractive and unhackneyed numbers for his season's programmes.

The Russian Orchestra, it must be confessed, has aimed higher than it, in general, has been able to reach. It has brought out a number of Russian works that have been new, and while there has been frequent disappointment at the work of these ambitious Muscovites, there has been music brought forward that was worth more than a sensation. The orchestra authorities' promise of Rachmaninoff, and the relations which Mr. Safonoff bears to it, will doubtless direct public attention toward it more than has hitherto been the case.

\+ + +

The imagination balks at the list of virtuosos who will present themselves for the suffrages of the New York music lovers this season. There are these pianists: Messrs. Reisenauer, Bauer, Pugno, Joseffy, Stojowski, Rudolf Ganz, Rachmaninoff, Randolph, Gebhard, Lhévinne, A. Rubinstein—Arthur, not Anton; Mmes. Aus der Ohe, Samaroff, Coons, Von Betz. Probably Mr. Vincent d'Indy will appear as a pianist with the Kneisel Quartet, and if arrangements can be made, so will Mr. Weingartner. Among the violinists are Messrs. Kubelik, Marteau, Heermann, and Prof. Hess, and Mmes. Otie Chew, Marie Hall, Maud Powell, and Marie Nichols. Even the violoncellists will be numerous—Mr. Schroeder, Gérardy, Mr. Warnke, the new Boston orchestra man, and Miss Elsa Ruegger come first for mention. The singers will be legion: Mmes. Sembrich, Calvé, and Gadski, Miss Muriel Foster, Mme. Kirkby Lunn, and Miss Bessie Abbot will be among the most prominent of the women; Ben Davies will come from England, and there will be, of course, a countless number of local singers who are not mentioned because of their number, and who will give distinction and variety to the season's concerts.

There will be a gratifying increase in the offerings of chamber music. Interest in chamber music is, perhaps, the truest touchstone of a community's musical culture, and it is worthy of note that besides the six concerts of the Kneisel Quartet's series, three by the Kaltenborn Quartet, three by the Dannreuther Quartet, with one extra one to celebrate its twentieth anniversary, and three by the Margulies Trio, there will be three by the new Schulz Quartet. Besides this, it may be announced that the Flonzaley Quartet, that Mr. E. J. de Coppet has formed and supported, will be heard in one, and perhaps several public concerts.

Even the Oratorio Society will give one more concert than usual this season, five in all, counting the two Christmas performances of "The Messiah." There will be, of course, the usual two by the Musical Art Society, and the Spring concert by the People's Choral Union, which most people miss and lose a good deal by missing, to say nothing of the numerous concerts by the private clubs, the Mendelssohn Glee Club, the Musurgia, and their fellows.

RICHARD ALDRICH.

THE FLONZALEY QUARTET.

The Flonzaley String Quartet has returned from Europe, and has begun its work in this city. It will probably be heard early in the season in at least one public concert, and perhaps in several. This interesting organization attracted considerable attention last season in several public concerts that it gave for charitable purposes, by the courtesy of Mr. Edward J. de Coppet. Mr. de Coppet, who is an enthusiastic amateur of chamber music, formed this quartet by securing four artists from Europe, who devote their entire time to rehearsing and preparing works to be played at his home in this city and in his country house in Switzerland. These players are Messrs. Poehon, Betti, Ara, and d'Archambeau. For the last month or two they have been giving public concerts for charitable purposes in various cities in Switzerland, Belgium, and elsewhere.

CROSBY BROWN COLLECTION.

An Illustrated Lecture on the Rare and Primitive Musical Instruments.

An illustrated lecture on the Crosby Brown collection of musical instruments of all nations will be given by Miss F. Morris at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Eighty-second Street and Fifth Avenue, Monday evening, Oct. 30, at 8:15 o'clock. This lecture was given before the convention of the National Music Teachers' Association, held at Columbia University on the occasion of their visit to the Museum last June, and is now repeated at the request of E. M. Bowman, conductor of the Temple Choir, Brooklyn. The lecture will be supplemented by a visit to the five rooms in the north wing of the Museum, where the 3,500 instruments are installed.

Such is the modest announcement of the Museum authorities. It deserves widespread attention among the music lovers of this city. Few of them, unfortunately, are aware that in the Crosby Brown collection this city possesses the finest and most complete collection of musical instruments in the world, considering its range and scope. There are, of course, finer collections of European instruments in certain of the capitals of Europe. But even these cannot compete in some respects with the Crosby Brown collection, as in the single item of the Cristofori piano which it possesses. Cristofori was the inventor of the piano. Two instruments of his making are known to be extant, and of the two the one in the Metropolitan Museum is the older. In many other lines the Brown collection possesses specimens of the utmost rarity.

But it is in the showing of primitive instruments of savage tribes from all parts of the world that this collection is richest, and in its richness unique. There is scarcely a known instrument that is not represented here by one or many examples. Every quarter of the globe has been ransacked for them, and every resource utilized to procure them. At the Metropolitan Museum better than anywhere else the primitive conceptions of music may be studied through primitive man's devices for producing it. The collection has been scientifically arranged and catalogued. It deserves to be better known by those who are interested in the subject, and such a lecture as Miss Morris is to deliver is well calculated to explain it and some of its most noteworthy treasures.

OPERA SINGERS ARRIVING.

Preparations for the approaching season of opera at the Metropolitan will shortly enter on the last and most interesting stage, when it will be possible to give general rehearsals. The orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Conried's conductors, the chorus, under Mr. Nepoti, and the ballet under Mr. Albertieri, have for some time been at work. Gradually, too, the prima donnas and male "stars" are returning to the Metropolitan. Mme. Nordica, Mme. Eames, Mme. Louise Homer, Miss Jacoby, Miss Paula Ralph, and other artists in the company are already in this country, and on Tuesday next three of Mr. Conried's famous tenors—Mr. Caruso, Mr. Knote, and Mr. Dippel—will arrive on the Kaiser Wilhelm II. They will be followed some days later by Mme. Alton, Mr. Goritz, Mr. Bell-Resky, (the new baritone,) and other singers. Scenic and lighting rehearsals occur daily at the Metropolitan.

Mme. Shotwell-Piper, the young dramatic soprano, is to take the soprano part of the Shakespeare cycle first sung last year by Mme. Gadski. Mme. Piper, who is a Southerner by birth, made her studies solely under teachers in this country. Associated with Mme. Piper for the twenty-four performances of the Shakespeare cycle—the name of Grace Wassall's setting to the sonnets—are David Bispham, Kelley Cole, and Katharine Fisk. Later in the season Mme. Piper will make a tour of the South and West.

Raoul Pugno, the French pianist, sailed yesterday from Havre on the steamer La Savole, and is due in New York on the 5th. He is accompanied by his family, who make their first visit to this country. Pugno will open his tour in Boston on Nov. 15, and on the 18th will make his reappearance in this city with the Russian Symphony Orchestra in Carnegie Hall. Pugno will give his first recital in Mendelssohn Hall on Thursday afternoon, Nov. 23, and the second on the afternoon of the 28th, in the same place.

Edwin Grasse, the violinist, is to be heard in New York this Winter in three recitals in Mendelssohn Hall, the first of which will be given on Wednesday evening, Nov. 29.

Herbert Witherspoon, the basso, who is to give a recital in Mendelssohn Hall on Thursday afternoon, Nov. 16, will on this occasion sing the same programme as he did when he sang in London last May. That concert, as indicated by the London newspaper notices, was a success.

Marie Hall has selected an elaborate programme for her opening concert in this country, in Carnegie Hall, on Wednesday evening, Nov. 8. She is to be heard in Tschaikowski's and Paganini's concertos and the rondo capriccioso by Saint-Saëns. The New York Symphony Orchestra, Walter Damrosch conductor, will assist Miss Hall.

Hugo Heermann, the German violinist, assisted by his son, Emil Heermann, will make his reappearance here in a recital in Mendelssohn Hall on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 18. Young Heermann has been sharing the success of his father in the last Summer on their tour in Australia. At present both are in California.

PLANS OF THE LIEDERKRANZ.

THE Deutscher Liederkranz has prepared an elaborate programme for the coming season. The most important entertainment will take place on Feb. 11, when Engelbert Humperdinck is to be the guest of honor at the society's second concert. Mr. Humperdinck has been invited by Heinrich Conried to come to the Metropolitan Opera House on the occasion of the production of his opera, "Hänsel and Gretel," and the members of the Liederkranz have seized the opportunity to honor the composer, and on the evening of his visit they will produce several of his own works. Their preparation is in the hands of Mr. Arthur Claassen.

The society is to celebrate its fifty-ninth anniversary on Jan. 13. The arrangements for the celebration, which will take place at the clubhouse at the corner of Fifty-eighth Street and Park Avenue, have not yet been completed, but the committee in charge promises that everything will be done to make the occasion a memorable one.

The two chief musical interests of the club are the chorus and the orchestra, both of which are under the direction of Mr. Arthur Claassen. The orchestra is composed of sixty members, and contains some of the best amateur talent in the city. It is one of the few complete amateur orchestras in the world. They meet for rehearsal every Wednesday evening. The chorus varies in size, containing as many as 200 voices at some of the large concerts. An interesting feature of the chorus work is the fact that it is made up equally of men and women, the latter being relatives of the members. At some concerts only the male voices are used, but usually there is a mixed chorus. The women show a great deal of interest in the work, and the arrangement adds greatly to the social success of the entertainments. The chorus rehearses twice a week, on Tuesday and Friday evenings.

The programme for the year began on Oct. 28, when there was a "musical evening" at the clubhouse, at Park Avenue and Fifty-eighth Street. On this occasion Becker's "Geschichte," a comic opera, was presented. The cast was made up of well-known professionals, assisted by the club's orchestra. Mr. Emil Schenck, the 'cello soloist, played.

On Sunday afternoon, Nov. 12, there is to be a concert of chamber music, at which the Richard Arnold Quartet will appear.

The first concert will be held on Nov. 28, when a new work entitled, "To the Genius of Germany," by Eugen D'Albert, will be presented by a professional orchestra, the full club chorus of two hundred male and female voices, and four vocal soloists.

A second chamber music concert will be given on Jan. 28, a fortnight before the concert in honor of Mr. Humperdinck. At the end of the month the annual masquerade ball will be held in the large concert hall at the clubhouse. This is always one of the most festive occasions of the year. The third and last concert is on March 24, and the orchestra section only will appear then.

It will be seen that this is an unusually complete and attractive programme, and the members of the Liederkranz are looking forward to one of the most successful years in the history of the society.

WHAT THE ARION IS DOING.

THE Arion Society has not arranged the details of its programme for this season, but there will be the usual liberal number of concerts, carnivals, balls, and similar entertainments for the members and their friends.

The first will be a "musical evening" on Nov. 4, to be followed by a concert on Nov. 19, at which the club "Mannerchor" of 150 voices will be assisted by a professional orchestra of fifty players.

On Dec. 9 there will be a dance at the clubhouse, in East Fifty-ninth Street, and on New Year's Eve the customary festivities will welcome 1906.

There are to be three "carnivals" at the club on Jan. 6, 27, and Feb. 17. These are a form of entertainment peculiar to this society. They include music, speeches, dancing, and hilarity of all sorts. They are always very popular occasions.

The second large concert will be held on Jan. 14, and the club chorus and an orchestra will take part.

The annual masquerade ball in Madison Square Garden, which is open to the public, will be held on Feb. 9. It will be followed a week later by another at the clubhouse, to which only members and their friends will be admitted.

The last concert will be on April 8, and the season will close with a children's festival on April 15.

The chorus work at the Arion is in charge of Julius Lorenz, and the orchestra is conducted by Richard Arnold of the Philharmonic Society.

THE MANUSCRIPT SOCIETY.

The Manuscript Society is devoted to the production of new works by Americans. It will meet this year on the last Saturday of every month at the rooms of the National Art Club, at 37 West Thirty-fourth Street. The President, Frank Sealy, with Carl Venth, is in charge of the entertainments, the first of which was on Oct. 28. Mr. Venth, who has just returned from a visit to Norway, presented several pieces of his own composition.

The details of the other entertainments have not yet been arranged, but in general the custom of producing original works by the members will be adhered to. The only change will be the presentation of several manuscript works by honorary members of the society, among whom are some of the most distinguished living composers.

The celebrated Norwegian composers Sinding, Svendsen, and Grieg have all promised to send manuscripts. Besides the performance of these works Mr. Sealy intends to invite many of the prominent professional performers to appear at the monthly meetings.

THE TONKUENSTLER SOCIETY.

The Tonkünstler Society of New York and Brooklyn is to continue its custom of holding two meetings each month, one in Manhattan and one on the other side of the river. It is the intention of the society to limit the performances, as far as possible, to original works by members, and, as formerly, the meetings will not be open to the public.

The programme for the first meeting on Tuesday last at Assembly Hall presented two attractive features. A trio composed of Mrs. Grasse-Thomason, piano; Carl Venth, violin, and Leo Schulz, 'cello, played several pieces from manuscript for the first time. They are by Mr. Venth, who has tried to interpret the Norwegian spirit in these works. Six duets were sung, also from the original manuscript. They are by Louis Victor Saar.

The programme for the second meeting in Brooklyn has not yet been announced.

The society's last year was an unusually successful one. The interest of the members in the work at the meetings has been great, and the membership list has been constantly in danger of breaking the rule limiting the number to one hundred. It has been decided, however, to have nothing but chamber music at the meetings, and not to alter their character in any way.

THE Y. M. C. A. ORCHESTRAS.

The Young Men's Christian Association is by no means devoid of music lovers, especially at the Harlem and Twenty-third Street branches. In addition to the regular classes for banjo, guitar, and singing, there are two excellent orchestras at both these divisions of the association.

The Twenty-third Street orchestra has been going a little longer and has somewhat the larger repertory. It contains twenty-two pieces, and the men practice regularly under Mr. Herwegh von Ende, a violinist and musician of reputation.

Unlike the members of the other courses in musical instruction at the Young Men's Christian Association, the orchestra men do not have to pay anything for what Mr. von Ende teaches them. They are required, however, to give an informal recital every third Sunday afternoon, to which a small admission fee is charged. This plan has been found to work very satisfactorily, and some of the other branches of the association are thinking of starting similar orchestras on this basis.

A MASONIC CONCERT.

A concert in aid of the maintenance fund of the Masonic Sanatorium for Consumptives will be given to-day at 2 P. M. in Carnegie Hall. There will be an orchestra of 125 men, conducted in turn by Mr. Damrosch, Mr. Franko, Mr. Herbert, and Mr. Sousa—attention is called to the fact that these names are alphabetically arranged—and a chorus of 300 voices under the direction of Walter Henry Hall. The soloists will be Mme. Lillian Blauvelt, soprano, and Gwilym Miles, baritone. This will be Mme. Blauvelt's farewell to the concert stage. She will sing "Una Voce" from the "Barber of Seville" and an air from "The Sicilian Vespers." The chorus will sing the Hallelujah Chorus from "The Messiah."

Miss Minnie Coons.

LITTLE ORCHESTRAL PLAYERS.

Interesting Work at the Music School Settlement in East 3d St.

The Music School Settlement at 55 East Third Street is a school for children, most of whom are not more than 12 or 14 years old, and several are not over 7 or 8. Yet there is probably no school in the city where so much hard work is performed with equal enthusiasm.

This institution was started ten years ago by Miss Emilie Wagner. At first it was only a small class, occupying rooms in the College Settlement in Rivington Street. It was a purely voluntary and charitable experiment that met with instant success. The children of the neighborhood crowded to be taught, and larger accommodations soon became necessary. It was some time, however, before sufficient funds could be secured. Two years ago a number of people interested in charitable enterprises formed a society, which was incorporated under the name of the Music School Settlement. Mrs. Howard Mansfield is the President of the association. The two small adjoining houses in Third Street were bought and altered to suit the needs of the class, which, under its new name, soon became a school with nearly 200 pupils. Thirty rooms are now available for teaching, and there is a hall for the orchestra concerts.

There are three classes of teachers—those who live at the school and have been appointed by the society, those who occasionally visit the school and give free lessons, and the more advanced pupils who instruct the beginners. The interest in singing is not great compared with the demand for piano and violin. The charge for instruction is 40 cents an hour, though the lessons seldom last more than half that time. Many of the children can only afford a ten-cent lesson of fifteen minutes. Those who wish to practice in the building pay 5 cents for the use of a piano or violin for half an hour.

In addition to the piano, violin, and harmony classes there is a junior orchestra for the younger children who are just beginning this kind of work, and a senior orchestra for the more skillful performers. The latter give a concert once a month to which the children invite their relatives and friends. Outsiders are also admitted. In the Spring the annual public concert takes place.

The general supervision of the school is in the hands of David Mannes, who conducts the senior orchestra, and is at the head of the violin department. Miss Wagner conducts the junior orchestra and assists in the violin teaching. Miss Constance Mills is in charge of the piano department.

The number of pupils is constantly growing, and even the present accommodations are none too large to meet the demands for the youthful enthusiasts who apply for instruction. Most of the pupils are looking forward to music as a means of earning a livelihood, and the society endeavors to find positions for those who show marked ability. With the idea that it is too late for them to learn, very few applicants are accepted who are over 18 years old.

Any one will be well repaid by a visit to the Settlement. There are no signs of activity there in the morning, for the children are all at school, but from 3 o'clock until supper time the house is crowded.

ST. PAUL'S OLD ORGAN CASE.

A Fine Piece of English Work More Than a Century Old.

Few of the many visitors to old St. Paul's Church, on lower Broadway, notice or know anything about one of its oldest and most interesting features. This is the organ in the gallery at the west end of the church, whose fine old mahogany case was brought over from England to be placed there in 1802. St. Paul's being then, as now, a chapel of old Trinity, the vestry of the latter church decided that there was need of a new organ, and George Pike England, a well-known English organ builder of the time, was given the order for one which would be equal to the one in Trinity Church, and a year later it was put in place.

There is no record of the cost, but it was an excellent organ, with twenty-four stops and inclosed in a beautiful mahogany case. The case and the pipes remain as they were over a hundred years ago, the wood improved with age, and the beautiful groups of dull gold pipes. The style is admirable, as at the time of its construction England was distinguishing itself in fine work in mahogany, in Hepplewhite and Sheraton furniture. There are three towers built out in the upper part of the organ supported by bases carved in a feather design. The lower part of the organ is in panels outlined with gold.

All of New York was below St. Paul's when its beautiful new organ was put in, and generations have come since to listen to the music and have passed away or moved to other parts of the city, which gradually extended for ten miles above the old church. The organ remained in its original condition for sixty-eight years, until about 1870, when it was felt that a larger one was required, and the Odells of New York were given the order for it. But the old case still remained, only broadened to admit the greater breadth of the new instrument. The old organ was still in good condition, and was taken by the makers of the new one in part payment for it. It was carefully renovated, a new case made for it, and then sold to the Roman Catholic Church of the Immaculate Conception in Port Jervis, N. Y.

It is still to-day in that church in constant use, sweet toned and ready to stand years more of service after the hundred during which it has done duty. The original keyboard is being used, and the ivory keys are hollowed and worn with much fingering.

Under the direction of Mr. Edmund Jacques, the present organist of St. Paul's, the Odell organ was improved in several ways in 1902, and is one of the best in New York. But it is not more satisfactory as an instrument than is the old case in which it stands, for beauty and decorative effect.

Many parts of St. Paul's have been repaired and renewed during its years of service. Visitors sit in Washington's pew in the seat in which, as they think, Washington sat, not knowing that though the place is the same the seat has been replaced more than once. There are other parts of the church older, but nothing more interesting than the beautiful organ case, which Mr. Jacques, who roamed around among the cathedrals of Europe this past Summer, says is very similar to that of Gloucester Cathedral. St. Paul's Chapel was built in 1776, and is the only Colonial church building in the city.

AMONG THE ORGANISTS.

At the West Presbyterian Church, in Forty-second Street, between Fifth and Sixth Avenues, to-night selections from a new sacred cantata, "The Soul Triumphant," by Harry Rowe Shelley, will be given under the direction of Bruno Huhn, organist of the church.

William C. Carl, who has recently returned from an interesting trip to Japan, China, and the Philippines, will give a series of organ concerts in the First Presbyterian Church in November. The programmes will contain a long list of novelties, including a paraphrase on the "Kimigayo," or Japanese National Anthem.

The "big" music for the Protestant Episcopal Church of St. Mary the Virgin, Forty-sixth Street, began on the first Sunday in October this year. The more elaborate musical part of the service is omitted during the warm weather, closing about Trinity Sunday, as a rule, and beginning again in the Fall. This morning Mozart's Seventh Mass is to be sung in the church, and the tenor solo in the anthem will be "Be Thou Faithful Unto Death," from St. Paul. Wiegand's Vesper service will be given, and Abt's Evening Hymn sung with bass solo and chorus. Mozart Twelfth Mass is to be sung next Sunday.

St. Mary's music attracts attention in all parts of the country, and its programmes travel a surprising distance to people who are interested in church music. The church has thirty men and boys in its vested choir in the chancel who sing the recitative part of the services, and there are thirty-four voices in the mixed choir in the gallery.

All the standard masses and vespers of the French and Italian schools are sung, and the church has acquired an extensive musical library, largely of its own arrangement. Most of the masses used have been arranged expressly for the church services, and the Latin words translated into English. This was begun by Dr. George B. Prentice, who is now organist emeritus of the church, after having given it thirty years of active service. It is continued by the present organist, Frank Jarrett Chegwidden, who devotes all his time to the work of the church. In addition to organ and choir, there is an orchestra accompaniment at St. Mary's—always strings and kettledrum—and at the high festivals this is increased to twenty-five pieces. The orchestra increases the musical work of the church, many of the masses not being written with orchestral accompaniment.

MUSIC AT DR. PARKHURST'S.

They are congratulating themselves upon their choir at the Madison Square Presbyterian Church this Fall. They have a new basso, Edmund Jahn, a Western man, who succeeded Purdon Robinson in May, and whom they consider an excellent singer. Walter H. Robinson, the tenor, who was a Toronto man, has received an offer of $1,500 to return to the church in which he previously sang in that city, but he has refused it, will continue to sing in Dr. Parkhurst's church, and every one is pleased. The other soloists of the church are Miss Effie Stewart, soprano; Miss Maude Smith, alto, and when the new church is completed there will be more singers and more music.

Prof. H. E. Parkhurst, a brother of Dr. Parkhurst and the organist of the church, is already receiving applications for a chorus, which will sing in the new church. It will be a new feature of the music, which is to be broadened in many directions. This chorus is to be a large and carefully selected one. Only very good voices will be considered, and it is planned to make it notable among church choruses in the city.

There is to be a large and first-class organ in the new church. It will be a Hutchings-Votey double organ, one in the chancel and one in the gallery, with four manuals in the chancel. The organ will have a fine selection of solo stops with chimes and will cost in the neighborhood of $25,000.

Louis Tiffany, who is one of the parishioners of the church, and who has the contract for the interior decorations, has also the contract for the organ cases, and they will conform to the decorations of the church. These will be an adaptation of those in the Church of St. Sophia at Constantinople. The organ cases will be beautiful and decorated with finely carved figures in relief. It is expected that the church will be ready for services late in the Winter, and rehearsals for the chorus will be begun about six weeks before.

SEMBRICH AND BISPHAM AS JURORS.

The schools in Brooklyn appear to open later than they do in Manhattan. The Master School of Music of 108 Montague Street, Brooklyn, which was started last year, is to begin its second season on Nov. 2. Mme. Aurelia Jager, the director of Heinrich Conried's Metropolitan Opera School, is again at the head of the Faculty. Mr. Victor Beigel is to be her associate teacher this year.

It is intended to add other departments to the school later on, but at present only vocal culture is taught. In addition to the regular courses there is to be an opera class and evening classes for those who cannot attend in the daytime. No pupils under seventeen years of age are accepted, and all applicants must have received some musical education. A "Visiting Jury of Musicians" has been established, and Mme. Marcella Sembrich and Mr. David Bispham have consented to serve on it.

CALVARY'S BOY ORCHESTRA.

Training for Choristers Whose Voices Have Changed—The Christmas Carols.

Calvary Protestant Episcopal Church, Fourth Avenue and Twenty-first Street, will come out this year with something entirely new in its music. This is an orchestra of boys, which has been studying under an expert bandmaster for the last year, and will, it is expected, be ready by the holidays to play in the church. The idea is an entirely new one in this country, and is, to a certain extent, borrowed from Germany by Mr. Lacey Baker, the organist of the church.

There are some sixteen or eighteen boys in the orchestra, and they play a wide variety of instruments, violin, 'cello, flute, trombone, oboe, horn, bassoon, clarinet, bass tuba, kettledrum, &c. The boys are graduates from the choir boys whose voices have broken, and this orchestra answers a double purpose. It keeps the boys in touch with the church at the age when those interested in them feel is a critical time in a boy's life, from 14 to 22 and 23, and provides an orchestra of musicians trained in the church service, not picked up here and there, like a concert band. More, even, than that, it gives the boys who have received the training a profession which will always stand them in good stead as a means of livelihood.

"They can earn $4 a night in an orchestra," says Mr. Baker, "and that is not bad in these days."

It was necessary to begin at the beginning in giving the instruction, but the boys had already a good foundation in the training they had received in the choir and they have made good progress. New recruits are joining the orchestra constantly, the ages of the choir boys ranging from 8 to 15, and one or more are dropping out constantly. The orchestra has been working nearly twelve months, and it is expected that it will provide its share of the Christmas music, appearing in the church then for the first time.

German boys attending the military training schools who take up music are exempt to a certain extent from the compulsory military service in Germany, and for that reason many of them turn their attention to it. These young men then coming to this country, with the command of one or two musical instruments, find themselves independent when they reach here or are tided over hard times until they find other employment, and it is this which suggested to Mr. Baker his boys' orchestra. It promises so well that answering as it does a question which has been considered seriously in the church, it will very likely be adopted to a greater or less extent by other churches when it is understood that it is practicable.

Calvary's musical programme for the season has not yet been outlined, but the distinctive feature of the Winter, the Christmas Eve Carol Service, will be held as usual. This is a service unique in this country, though a familiar service in Paris. All the world knows of the beautiful Christmas Eve service at the Madeleine, and no good American in Paris at the holiday season fails to attend it. The same service is given here at Calvary, but with the old English carols in place of the French. It is a beautiful service here as well as abroad; the church is packed to the doors by crowds of people, who come an hour ahead of time to get seats, and the offering is contributed to the waifs and strays of the city gathered at Blackwell's Island.

One feature of the service is the musical star who always comes to sing—some member of the Metropolitan Opera House company. A great singer is always heard at the French service. But Calvary does not make a fashionable performance, for the service is given as nearly as possible after the manner of the music of the early church, and sung as the carols were sung in 1640. The church is lighted only by candles; there is a candle procession of the choir and clergy around the church, and the voices in the singing are unaccompanied by the organ. It is a beautiful service, which too few people have an opportunity to hear.

Old Trinity's New Bass.

Old Trinity Church, on Lower Broadway, is to have a new solo bass this Fall who is said to be an exceptionally fine singer. He is Lyman Ward, a practicing lawyer in New York and a Lakewood man who has sung at All Saints' Church, sometimes spoken of as the "Goulds' Church," in Lakewood. Mr. Ward has been singing at Trinity since the second Sunday in October, and will begin his regular services at the church on the 1st of November. He succeeds C. H. Mittendorff, who was obliged to leave for business reasons. Trinity Church rehearsals are held in the afternoon, and this is not always convenient for men in business.

Trinity Church has probably one of the largest and best arranged musical libraries in the city, though it is comparatively conservative in its work and keeps close to the cathedral service from the beginning to the end of the year. When anything new comes out, however, it is usually to be found on the musical programme, and Victor Baier, the organist, in every trip abroad brings home something in the way of music not to be found in this country. This year it was Niedermeyer's mass in G, which is said not to have been done in this country before, although the Niedermeyer mass in B minor is familiar in many of the Roman Catholic churches. Mr. Baier arranges the music and puts the Latin into English for the church service. This arrangement of music has been done in the church for a number of years. It was begun by Dr. A. H. Messiter, then the organist of the church, thirty or more years ago, and has been continued by Mr. Baier. The collection of music is extensive and arranged chronologically instead of alphabetically.

CROTCHETS.

"I believe in letting things soak in a long time," declared David Bispham, the baritone, the other day, referring to his methods of study. "For me there is no other way but to learn slowly. I read quickly, and have a good ear, but the line-upon-line method seems to be the best, all things considered. Moreover, it is better for the voice to have the mind as free as possible when undertaking to master a difficult rôle, especially a Wagnerian one. Wagner's music is like a new language, which must be carefully learned before its beauties can be appreciated. In studying an operatic rôle I first master the text, and in the case of a Wagnerian part, it should be learned and declaimed, as if on the stage, before the music is considered. That is the best way, and likewise the most interesting one, if the soul is in the work."

At the Lachmund Conservatory the repertory course for professionals, "Traditional Liszt Interpretations," has been resumed by Mr. Lachmund, who studied for three years with Liszt, (with Rosenthal, Reisenauer, D'Albert, and Sauer as fellow-students,) but was on intimate terms of friendship with the great master. In this way all suggestions or alterations made to pieces of Chopin, Liszt, and Schumann, played by Mr. Lachmund and other pupils, were carefully noted down, and are embodied in this special course for pianists.

Mr. Eugene Heffley is busy teaching at his studio in Carnegie Hall. In addition to his own pupils, Mr. Heffley has taken over those of Mr. MacDowell, whose serious illness has caused his friends much alarm. Mr. Heffley is an intimate friend of the composer, and MacDowell's music is always represented at the piano recitals which Mr. Heffley gives from time to time.

Mme. Anita Rio, the "Brazilian Soprano," will undertake an extended tour of song recitals covering the important cities in the United States and Canada, beginning next month. Mme. Rio made the phenomenal record of 106 concert appearances last season. She has been heard here in oratorio as well as in concert. Next June she expects to go to Berlin to make her début in grand opera.

"Melody Manor" is the name which Ellison Van Hoose has lit upon for his country place, and the tenor is said to be so taken up with the novelty of raising everything, from chickens to peaches, that his manager has had to make all sorts of dire threats to induce the newly fledged farmer to leave the joys of agriculture for the toils of the concert stage. The tenor's plans for the forthcoming season include a tour of the country. Mr. Van Hoose will open his season in Boston Nov. 3 with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A dinner was given to Homer N. Bartlett at the Lotos Club last Thursday to congratulate him on his success in winning the prize for his composition on the theme of five notes introduced into the story of "The Kranbach Nocturne." The prize was offered by Kranich and Bach. The judges were Alexander Lambert, Homer Norris, Clement R. Gale, and Joseph Gray Kitchell, and officers and directors of the firm.

Mr. Isadore Luckstone has arranged that, once a month throughout the Winter, his advanced pupils will give recitals at his studio, 128 East Sixty-fourth Street. One of his pupils, Mr. Ellison Van Hoose, will make a tour with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the opening of the season, and will also sing in a series of Wagner Concerts with Mme Gadski. They will be repetitions of the Wagner concerts he sang with Mme. Ternina three years ago.

Anton Hegner, 'cellist, has just returned to America. He went to London last Spring to play with Mme. Patti at a concert in Albert Hall. Upon this occasion he performed his own fantasia for 'cello unaccompanied. He later toured Scandinavia, playing, among other works for the 'cello, his own Concerto No. 2, just published. The string quintet which Mr. Hegner completed just before leaving America has been published by Breitkopf and Haertel. Mr. Hegner expects to be engaged this season with private teaching and composing.

Miss Elsa Breidt is to make her first professional appearance in New York with Walter Damrosch's New York Symphony Orchestra. At the age of ten Miss Breidt appeared in Chicago at a concert under Theodore Thomas, who took much interest in the child and advised her to make music her profession. For the last five years she has been studying with Alexander Lambert, and it is at his advice that she now begins her professional career as a pianist.

Mr. Abraham W. Lilienthal, well known to musicians as a teacher of composition, has just completed a string quartet, Op. 22, which will soon be published. It is in F sharp minor. It will be heard in public this season. The Tonkünstler Society gave a string quintet of his last October.

"THE WHITE CAT," a Drury Lane spectacle, Thursday evening at the New Amsterdam Theatre.

ARNOLD DALY at the Garrick Theatre on Monday evening next will produce Bernard Shaw's "Mrs. Warren's Profession."

The unusual amount of discussion which has been provoked by the announcement will probably serve to crowd the house for the opening performance. It is not necessary to discuss the play further at this time, as its theme is familiar to all persons who are likely to be interested in the production. In announcing his plans Mr. Daly makes the rather remarkable statement that children will positively not be admitted to the Garrick during the engagement.

The actor's company for this production has been strengthened by the addition of Mary Shaw, who will create the rôle of Mrs. Warren. Miss Shaw's work as Mrs. Alving in "Ghosts" and other of her portrayals are fresh in public memory. Chrystal Herne is cast for the part of Vivie Warren. Mr. Daly takes the part of young Frank Gardner. The Rev. Sam Gardner will be portrayed by John Findlay. George Farren is cast for Mr. Praed, and Fred Tyler for Sir George Crofts.

\+ + +

Ben Greet and his English company will to-morrow evening present "Henry the Fifth" at Mendelssohn Hall as the first of a series of revivals of Shakespeare's plays in the Shakespearean manner. Mr. Greet needs no introduction to New York, for both "Everyman" and his revivals of "Twelfth Night" were notable successes. His aim is high, but it is his contention that there is a public which welcomes Shakespeare, minus elaborate scenery, and, incidentally dreary between-act waits, if they can have the complete text and an approximately close adherence to the spirit of Shakespeare's intention. Heretofore, in this country, Mr. Greet's revivals in this style have been confined to the comedies, with four special performances of "Hamlet" at colleges. Shakespeare's mighty epic of Agincourt acted in the old manner should prove particularly interesting. We have had "Henry the Fifth," with tons of scenery and armies of supernumeraries—and some of the play. Now we are to have the play—with one set of scenery and, as Mr. Greet modestly states, a company of forty.

Mr. Greet's performances will, operalike, be given only at stated times each week, viz.: On Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings, and Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday afternoons. "Henry V." will be given at all six performances this week. Next week "Much Ado About Nothing" will be given on Monday and Friday evenings and Wednesday afternoon, and "The Merchant of Venice" on Wednesday evening, Friday and Saturday afternoons, and at an extra matinée on election day, Tuesday, Nov. 7. The third week will be devoted to "Macbeth," and the fourth to "Julius Caesar."

\+ + +

For the third week of their limited engagement at the Knickerbocker Theatre, beginning to-morrow evening, Charles Frohman will present E. H. Sothern and Julia Marlowe in an elaborate revival of "The Merchant of Venice." In this production the stars will be seen for the first time in this city in the rôles of Shylock and Portia.

It is declared that it is their intention to offer an interpretation of this comedy that will aim at striking stage pictures pervaded by a vivid Venetian atmosphere and emphatic ensemble effects without duly enlarging the importance of Shylock and Portia. The carnival scene in the square in front of Shylock's house will be a gorgeous affair. Several scenes of the comedy that are usually neglected in latter day representations will be restored, such as the jailer scene between Shylock and Antonio, and the second act scene between Jessica and Launcelot Gobbo, and there will be as close and strict an adherence to the letter and spirit of the original Shakespearean text as possible. In this respect the coming production will follow in the footsteps of "The Taming of the Shrew," whose innovations challenged local theatregoers' admiration.

The evening performance will begin at exactly 8 o'clock and the Saturday matinée performance at 2.

\+ + +

Marie Cahill will return to the city to-morrow night at the Liberty Theatre, where she will present her new starring vehicle, "Moonshine." The piece is described as a musical play and is from the pen of Edwin Milton Royle and George V. Hobart, with the music by Silvio Hein.

The locale of the first act is at Heatherbanks, Henley-on-Thames, during an afternoon entertainment given by Lord Dumbgarven on the occasion of the annual regatta. There are two acts, and in the second the guests accompany their host to his country house, The Terraces, where he entertains them with an evening party in his rose pergola.

The time of the story is just prior to the breaking out of hostilities between Japan and Russia, and has to do with the diplomatic relations among all nations at that time.

Miss Cahill is said to have two or three songs in "Moonshine" which are fitting successors to "Nancy Brown," "Under the Bamboo Tree," and "The Congo Love Song." These are "Robinson Crusoe," "Don't Be What You Ain't," and "Foolish."

The cast in support of the star includes Sadie Harris, Dick Temple, George Beban, Roy Atwell, Frances Gordon, and Ward Kett.

\+ + +

George Edwardes's company from the Apollo Theatre, London, appearing here under the direction of Klaw & Erlanger, will present the first performance of "Veronique" at the Broadway Theatre to-morrow evening. This was generally conceded to be one of the prettiest musical comedies that Mr. Edwardes ever put on in the British metropolis. It ran continuously for upward of 500 performances, till its closing was forced to fill the American engagement.

Mr. Edwardes has sent over the entire company, with costumes and scenery intact, and the performances will be resumed to-morrow and presented exactly as they would be had the run at the Apollo been uninterrupted. The principals of the company are Ruth Vincent, Lena Maitland, Kitty Gordon, Emmie Santer, Valli Valli, Madge Vinton, Ruby Delmar, Florence Plunkitt, John Le Hay, Lawrence Rea, Aubrey Fitzgerald, Ralph Nairn, John Malcolm, and James Grant. Miss Vincent sings the principal rôle. She will be remembered for her performance in "The Medal and the Maid" at the Broadway Theatre two years ago. Mr. Lawrence Rea, who appeared here in "The Duchess of Dantzic" last season, plays Florestan, the opposite part. The principal comedy character is in the hands of John Le Hay, whose Monsier Coquenard was the talk of London.

The book of "Veronique" was written by MM. Vanloo and Duval, and the score was composed by Andre Messager, director of opera at Covent Garden. It was originally presented by a French company at the Coronet Theatre in London. It made such a hit that Mr. Edwardes secured the rights, had Henry Hamilton make an English version, and produced it at the Apollo Theatre. M. Messager, the composer, who arrived in New York on the Oceanic on Wednesday, will direct the orchestra at the Broadway Theatre to-morrow evening.

\+ + +

The New Amsterdam Theatre remains closed until next Thursday evening, when the first production of Klaw & Erlanger's fifth annual Drury Lane spectacle, "The White Cat," will occur. As in past seasons, this firm has imported all the scenery, costumes, and effects used at Drury Lane in the production of the same title put on last Christmas, but this is as far as the Drury Lane interest will extend. The English book and music have been entirely discarded, and Harry B. Smith and Ludwig Englander have provided a new book and score, and William Jerome and Jean Schwartz have furnished new songs and musical novelties.

"The White Cat" will be staged in three acts and fourteen scenes, while the company employed will number over 500 people, and is headed by William T. Hodge, Maude Lambert, Herbert Corthell, Edgar Atchison Ely, Edith St. Clair, Hugh J. Ward, William Macart, Henrietta Cropper, Harriet Worthington, Seymour Brown, Maida Snyder, Helen Lathrop, and Monte Elmo.

There will be three ballets, called "The Fruits of the Seasons," "The Triumph of Hymen," and "Christmas of All Nations" and in addition to these an unusually novel feature will be presented in the Ercole-Arlaza Castillan troupe of dancers and troubadours from the Theatre Royal of Madrid.

\+ + +

The bill at the Garden Theatre will be changed to-morrow night, when Robert B. Mantell will be seen in a revival of "Richelieu." William A. Brady has given an entirely new production for this play, which is promised as being especially elaborate. "Richelieu" will be kept on for Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings and Saturday matinée, while for the other evenings of the week a revival of "Othello" will be presented.

\+ + +

For the last two weeks of Mrs. Carter's engagement at the Belasco Theatre the actress will be again seen in "Zaza," which was so successfully revived a few weeks ago.

\+ + +

"The Wizard of Oz," rejuvenated by new songs and new spectacular effects, comes to the Academy of Music to-morrow night for a limited engagement. Montgomery and Stone will again appear in their old parts.

PLAYS THAT HOLD.

John Drew will give eight more performances of "De Lancey" at the Empire, and on Saturday evening next will bid farewell to New York for the present. Maude Adams follows on Nov. 6 in "Peter Pan."

"Man and Superman" keeps merrily on at the Hudson, delighting packed houses at every performance. Much credit is due to the excellent acting of Robert Loraine and his able support.

The success attained by William Faversham in Milton Royle's new play, "The Squaw Man," at Wallack's, seems very pronounced, and it is not likely that there will be any change at the playhouse for a long time.

There is much to make one laugh in George Ade's comedy, "Just Out of College," which is now in its third month at the Lyceum. Joseph Wheelock, Jr., in the star part, seems to be well fitted as the young college man.

Mme. Kalich in "Monna Vanna" continues at the Manhattan, where the drama was presented for the first time here last week. The production has many beautiful stage pictures.

Maxine Elliott is in the third month of her success, "Her Great Match," at the Criterion. No announcement as yet has been made of a termination of the popular engagement.

David Warfield continues to give his delightful portrayal of "The Music Master" at the Bijou. The business continues as large as when the comedy was first produced.

Henry E. Dixey begins the fourth week to-morrow evening in "The Man on the Box" at the Madison Square. The comedy seems to have won favor, as has the acting of the excellent supporting company.

James K. Hackett and Mary Mannering in "The Walls of Jericho" at the Savoy are now in the sixth week of their successful engagement, and the present outlook is that there will be no change at the theatre for a long time.

"The Prince Chap" remains at the Joe Weber Music Hall. The cast is a most competent one, and includes Cyril Scott, Thomas A. Wise, Cecil De Mille, Margaret Pitt, Helen Pullman, and Edith Speare.

Margaret Anglin enters on her seventh week at the Princess in "Zira" to-morrow evening. For the present matinées will be confined to Saturdays only, as the experiment of giving two matinées proved too much for Miss Anglin's strength.

MUSICAL ATTRACTIONS.

"Wonderland" at the Majestice has proved a popular success, and the theatre has been filled every evening. The company includes Sam Chip, Aimee Angeles, Lotta Faust, and Bessie Wynn.

Edna May and "The Catch of the Season" continue to attract capacity audiences at Daly's. The engagement ends on Nov. 25. Miss May's songs, "Buttercups" and "Molly O'Halloran" are the hits of the production.

Joseph Cawthorne remains at the Herald Square in "Fritz in Tammany Hall." As the east side baker Mr. Cawthorne seems to find much opportunity for funmaking.

At the Lew Fields' the burlesque of "The Music Master" and the condensed version of "It Happened in Nordland" are the attractions. Grace Field is at present appearing as the heroine in the burlesque.

McIntyre and Heath, in their production of "The Ham Tree," which has had such a popular run at the New York, begin the last two weeks of their engagement to-morrow night.

There is no change in the attendance at the Lyric, where De Wolf Hopper is playing in "Happyland." The comic opera is decidedly a "go."

"Frühlingsluft" is nearing the end of its run at the Irving Place. Lina Abarbanell is a vivacious little Haimni in the pretty operetta.

WITH THE STOCK COMPANIES.

"Lady Windermere's Fan" will be revived this week at Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre by the all-star stock company. Amelia Bingham will play the adventuress, Mrs. Erlynne, while Charles Richman will be the Lord Windermere. Others in the cast will be Harold Hartsell, Gerald Griffin, Dudley Hawley, and George Howell. Isabelle Evesson will play Mrs. Erlynne at the Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday matinées.

\+ + +

"Forbidden Fruit" will be presented this week at Proctor's 125th Street Theatre. William J. Kelley will have Stuart Robson's original part, and Charles Abbe will be seen as Sergt. Buster.

\+ + +

"Hazel Kirke" will be revived at the Yorkville Theatre this week by the Yorkville stock company. Mabel Montgomery will appear as Hazel and Eugene Moore as Dunstan Kirke.

COMBINATION HOUSES.

At the Fourteenth Street Theatre this week Hurtig & Seamon's musical comedy "In New York Town" will be the attraction. The authors of the piece are Willard Holcomb and Loney Haskell.

\+ + +

The Russell brothers are billed for this week at the Metropolis, where they will present their new melodrama, "The Great Jewel Mystery." Opportunity is offered in the play for the comedians' specialties.

\+ + +

To-morrow night at the West End, Nixon & Zimmerman's cartoon musical extravaganza, "Simple Simon Simple," will hold the boards. Musically the piece is said to be especially attractive.

\+ + +

"The Errand Boy," with Billy B. Van, is the offering announced for the American. The management promises new scenic and electrical effects, a pretty chorus, and plenty of music and fun.

\+ + +

Sam Bernard and Hattie Williams come to the Harlem Opera House to-morrow night in "The Rollicking Girl," which recently had an all-Summer's run at the Herald Square Theatre.

\+ + +

At the Grand Opera House Digby Bell returns to the city to-morrow evening in "The Education of Mr. Pipp." The cast remains practically the same as when seen last year at the Liberty Theatre.

\+ + +

A revival of "The Christian" will be seen this week at the New Star, with Ralph Stuart in the rôle of John Storm. An adequate production is promised.

\+ + +

"The Sign of the Cross" will play a week's engagement at the Murray Hill, beginning with a matinée to-morrow afternoon. The piece is said to have an effective scenic equipment.

\+ + +

The offering at the Third Avenue this week is "The Lighthouse by the Sea," a new sensational melodrama.

VAUDEVILLE.

At the head of the bill at Hammerstein's for the ensuing week, Williams & Walker, the successful colored comedians, will be seen. This is their first appearance in vaudeville for many years, and their engagement is limited to four weeks. It is said that they are to receive a percentage of the gross receipts during their Victoria engagement. Mr. Hammerstein believes that in having secured this act for his vaudeville bill, he has outstripped his own record for big and unusual specialties. Williams will be heard in one of his famous songs, while Walker will present "The Society Darky," as has been his wont heretofore. This attraction should prove a great card.

Other acts on the bill will be the Crane Brothers, burlesque minstrel act; Willy Zimmerman, portrayals of masters of music; the first time here of the Vernon Troupe, xylophone players; Lewis McCord & Co. in a comedy skit, Delmore & Lee, Bruno & Russell, Mlle. Alonzo and her educated dogs, and Hardy Tate's English Comedy Company in London's latest satire on the automobile craze, called "Motoring," which comes from the Palace Music Hall, London, after ten months' run.

\+ + +

Keith's headliner for the week of Oct. 30 is Cecilia Loftus, late leading woman with E. H. Sothern and star in "The Serio-Comic Governess." Miss Loftus will give her imitations of popular players, including Sarah Bernhardt in scenes from her latest plays. Second on the bill is Wilfred Clarke, assisted by Theo. Carew, in a one-act farce, entitled "No More Trouble." Staley & Birbeck, Billy Van, Howard's comedy ponies and dogs, James F. MacDonald, the singing comedian; the Valdings, European gymnasts, and the ever-popular kinetograph complete the bill.

\+ + +

The bill at Hurtig & Seamon's Music Hall this week will be headed by Peggy Pryde, the celebrated English comedienne, this being her first appearance in this country. Miss Pryde mimics in a sort of monologue "People I have seen." Louis Wesley, the comedian who comes to Harlem with a budget of new stories; the clever little fellow Adolph Zink, and Barney Fagan and Henrietta Byron, in their burletta entitled "Idle Fancy," are some of the headline acts that have a place on the bill. Other entertainers are Hal Godfrey and company in the one-act comedy "A Very Bad Boy"; Harry Rochez's dogs and ponies, Besnah and Miller, singers and dancers; Musical Heists, in a novel electrical act, and Herbert Deveau.

\+ + +

Houdini, the handcuff king, is the principal headliner of the new bill at the Alhamora. Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in their sketch, "The Yellow Dragon," are also announced, as are Carmencita, assisted by the famous danseuse's aid, Mlle. Aurora; Ed. Blondell & Co. in "The Lost Boy," Frank Bush, with new and familiar stories and impersonations; the Musical Avollos, xylophonists; the Brothers Lloyd, bounding rope performers from Europe; Ila Granna, singing comedienne, and as an extra feature, Ephraim Thompson's famous herd of performing elephants.

\+ + +

An unusually attractive bill is announced for Proctor's Twenty-third Street Theatre for this week. As headliners, Lillian Russell, Fanny Rice, and Herrmann hold the stellar places. This is Miss Russell's last week at the theatre, where she has been the feature for some time, and, as has been her custom, she will sing an entirely new selection of songs and appear in new gowns. Others are Louis Simon and Grace Gardner Company in a new version of "The New Coachman," Three Sisters Camaras, sensational European acrobats; Greene and Werner, the "Jungle Babes"; the Five Peschkoffs, Russian dancers; Eckhoff and Gordon, eccentric musical act; Lew Hawkins, monologist, and a very new set of motion pictures.

\+ + +

Adele Ritchie, the Dresden china comedienne, is announced as the star feature of the Colonial's new bill, commencing Monday afternoon. Annie Irish and her company will also appear in the comedienne's new sketch, "Jim and Me," assisted by a select company. The Mysterious De Biere, illusionist, is another feature. Others billed for the new week are the Rossow Midgets, Kittie Franey, European horse act; Fields and Ward, comedians, and Charlie Rossow. New pictures will be shown on the vitagraph.

\+ + +

The London Comedy Pantomime Company of fourteen players, presenting "A Night at an English Music Hall," will head an unusually strong vaudeville bill this week at Proctor's Fifty-eighth Street Theatre. Joseph Hart and Carrie Demar, late stars of "Foxy Grandpa," will be another head-line act. The Empire City Quartet, late features of "The Ham Tree," will also appear, while Rice and Provost will provide the comedy in their farcical absurdity "Bumpty Bumps." The remainder of the bill includes Anna Laughlin, late feature of "The Wizard of Oz"; Walter C. Kelly, Coleman's cats and dogs, Mallory Brothers, and Brooks and Willie Gardner.

\+ + +

At the Eden Musée a new series of pictures collected from the four corners of the earth, showing scenes and incidents of foreign life and the Vanderbilt motor race, will be shown on the cinematograph Sunday afternoon and evening. This is in addition to the sacred concerts afternoon and evenig by the Hungarian Orchestra, which have become a favorite with the public. The violin solos by Prof. Julius S. Seredy always catch the popular fancy. The "Flying Swallow" is on the programme for next Sunday.

\+ + +

Huber's Fourteenth Street Museum is certainly satisfying its patrons with Mme. Laurent's lions; Olga, the Queen of Snake Charmers; Capt. Witte, the great German giant, and J. M. Moore's Minstrels.

MARIE CAHILL IN "MOONSHINE," LIBERTY.

THE HIPPODROME.

The two hundred and fiftieth performance at the Hippodrome will occur on Tuesday afternoon next. Each patron at the matinée will receive an ornate terra cotta elephant as a souvenir of the occasion. A million and a quarter persons have seen the shows at the big playhouse.

The perilous plunge in "The Romance of a Hindoo Princess" continues to be the startling climax of the local stage. The dramatic merit of the new spectacle has been established on the firm foundation of public approval.

The other half of the programme, "A Yankee Circus on Mars," with its many features, remains.

Sousa and his famous band, with an extensive répertoire, will give a concert at the Hippodrome to-night.

CONCERTS AT PROCTOR'S.

For the first time since her engagement at the Wistaria Grove Emma Carus will appear on Broadway to-morrow at Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre. These concerts promise to become popular, as Mr. Proctor is arranging a series starting to-morrow which includes Broadway favorites and special numbers only. Besides Miss Carus the programme for the first concert of the new policy includes Lee Harrison, Charles Falk Semon, Reno and Richards, and many other head-liners.

The tickets are $1, and may be had at the door or at 225 and 227 West Fourteenth Street.

A NEW IDYL OF THE WEST

Edwin Milton Royle's Play, "The Squaw Man," a Sincere and Convincing Study--The Noble Red Man in a True Stage Light.

EDWIN MILTON ROYLE has written an idyl of the West that will enjoy, and deserves to enjoy, a lasting and substantial measure of success. "The Squaw Man" is a play for women, and, what is rarer, it is a play for men. Possibly the most peculiar fact about it is that it is written in such an exceptionally sincere vein that it will move the masculine part of our population as deeply as the feminine. And few plays do that. It is no unusual thing for women to sigh and weep in the presence of the simulated sorrows of the theatre, but these outbursts generally find the sterner masculine element smiling serenely in the attitude of superior mental calm. That calmness will be disturbed in the presence of such a throbbing heart story as Mr. Royle has told, and as it is set forth on the stage of Wallack's theatre. For there is rich, red blood in "The Squaw Man," its sentiment is irresistible, and underneath its grim and honest humor there is a suggestive note of deep and lasting pathos that lingers in the memory long after the curtain has fallen and the glimmer of the footlights has faded from the view.

Mr. Royle has set out to write a story of that picturesque phase which is fast disappearing—if indeed it has not already disappeared—from our Western American life. It may be said to his credit that he has succeeded splendidly. "The Squaw Man" justifies very pleasurable sensations in the breast of every one of us who is interested in the development of a drama of the soil. If it is not the great American drama come at last it is still a highly respectable contribution to a stage that has been none too rich in native works of even transient value, it represents an ambition well directed, and a talent and skill that justify such ambition.

Mr Royle is no novice in the art of play-writing. His present success is one that has been earned only after years of laborious, and often, we do not doubt, of most discouraging labor. He has written plays that failed, he has written plays that succeeded, and we presume he has written plays that, having never been produced, have not had the chance to do either the one or the other These facts, of course, do not in any way add or detract from his present achievement, for, in the theatre, we judge by results. But it is interesting, nevertheless, to pause now and then to discover the causes of success. We should say, without knowing the man other than through his work, that he has come into his own by reason of the fact that what he has done has been sincerely done. That indeed is the one quality which stands out most prominently in his latest play. Its third and fourth acts might easily enough have been transformed into mere exhibitions of mawkish sentimentality. What was needed to save them from such a fate was the mind to read deep down into the souls of his creatures the heart of sympathetic appreciation, and the hand sufficiently skilled to transfer them as vitalized symbols to the stage. These qualities the author of "The Squaw Man" obviously possesses.

The play's defects are of a kind that may not be readily overlooked, while some of its best quality, unfortunately, is subtle. In its greatest beauty it is a kind of symphony played upon the heart strings, with an underlying theme which finds its source in the well-springs of gentle and human emotion. Such a quality is all the more potent with playgoers because it is so very rare. To fail to take account of it while dwelling with needless insistence upon shortcomings of dramaturgic skill is worse than useless. It is manifestly unfair. For it does not matter how well the work is done if it is work that is not worth doing. It cannot be doubted that such an exhibition of sturdy, healthy, self-reliant manhood as is shown in "The Squaw Man" serves a more useful purpose than is involved in the mere transitory pleasure it affords. Mr. Royle's hero is a splendidly vigorous figure, and we can imagine no higher testimony to the author's skill than is provided in the fact that Jim Carston remains such a figure despite his presentation by an actor whose whole method is artificial, strained, and beset with affectation. But as far as such a thing could ever be possible with such an insistent personality we forget Mr. Faversham while entering heart and soul into the affairs of Jim Carston. To realize the superiority of the characterization over its impersonation it is only necessary to recall the scene of the parting with the child in the third act. There is such a note of genuineness in the writing, such a vigorous, manly swing to it all, that we are moved in spite of ourselves and of him.

Mr. Royle's cowboys savor of the soil and his Indians are careful studies. Here he has the advantage, too, of colorful interpretation. One naturally remembers that Theodore Roberts, as the big chief of the Utes, is conveying no new evidence of pictorial and histrionic accomplishment, for his Indian in "The Girl I Left Behind Me" was one of the sensational successes of that play. But in recalling that very achievement we get a perspective on the quality of the character that Mr. Royle has drawn. In the former play there was, as here, a chief and his daughter, but Fawn Afraid exercised a softening power over the old warrior that was altogether apart from truth. Mr. Royle has shown us the Indian in a more genuine light. Nat-U-Ritch is the white man's squaw. And at the first sign of disobedience the chief voices his sentiment and the sentiment of his people where woman is concerned. "If she will not obey, beat her. If she disobeys again, kill her." That is Indian. Fawn Afraid and her big chief father were sentimental fictions of the picturesque red man as he exists only in the highly flavored romances of the plains. The employment of the Indian language in this play, made intelligible through an interpreter, marks another departure. It is adroitly managed and adds no little to the realism of the incidents in which the red man figures. Hitherto our stage Indians have all had a most excellent understanding of English.

In the arrangement of his climaxes Mr. Royle has been particularly successful. The first act of the play is weak and its construction is such that an entirely new exposition is necessary in the second. But the curtain picture is skillful and serves to leave one with heightened curiosity as to what will follow. The succeeding acts are of direct cumulative interest, and the curtain-point of each is excellent. The incident in which Diana Wynnegate is for the first time brought face to face with the child of the man she loves is one that calls for precisely the delicate and sympathetic handling it has received.

And more to be commended than all these, since it is so rare, is the fact that Mr. Royle has resisted the temptation to show us the lovers at the last clasped in each other's arms. When the curtain falls our artistic sense is gratified by the tableau of the great, gaunt Indian chief standing stoically erect with the pathetically limp figure of the little mother squaw lying across his outstretched arms, and Carston and his English lady love discreetly in the background of our sympathies. Nothing more. Credit is allowed us for the power of imagination to end the story for ourselves. It is brief and concise—an appropriate ending for a crisply told tale.

These are excellencies in Mr. Royle's play, and they are worth emphatic consideration, the more because, as we have said, they are subtle and the kind of things that are likely to be overlooked. It requires no keen discrimination to discover that his first act is commonplace, but it is certain that without an act showing us Jim and Diana in their earlier relationship we would not feel any keen interest in their subsequent development.

Nor can we overlook the various expedients of atmospheric suggestion in a case where their employment is so effective and artistic. It is not often that we feel like saying a good word for the incidental music of a play, for the very simple reason that it does not often deserve it. But the little strain of Indian melody is so judiciously introduced that it merits a special word of approbation.

We have indicated our opinion of Mr. Faversham's playing in the third act, and what we said of that applies generally. Otherwise the acting of the drama is of a superior quality, George Fawcett providing an especially humorous sketch, and Emmet Shackelford and Bertram Marburg competent and appealing ones. W. S. Hart is most picturesque. Mr. Roberts's Tabywanta is a pictorial triumph, and Selena Fetter Royle and Selene Johnson make the most of limited opportunities. Mabel Morrison's Nat-U-Ritch is maintained in exactly the right key of suppression.

THEN AND NOW.

How green were the woods and how sweet was your kiss,
And heaven was there in the world below;
But now—am I changed that I thrill not at this?
If you had but loved me a year ago!

If you had but loved me a year ago,
Instead of to-day when the forests are bare,
When something is lacking and all I know
Is that I don't love you and don't even care.

THOMAS S. JONES.

IN THE NEW CANADIAN NORTHWEST.

Banff, Alberta, Oct. 20, 1905.

ALBERTA equals Germany in extent and excels it in natural wealth. It has 50,000,000 acres that will grow thirty bushels of Winter wheat to the acre; 10,000,000 acres that will produce the choicest gardan products of tha temperate zone; 50,000,000 acres that will pastura the finest flocks and herds, and 40,000,000 acres that will be forever sacred to the artist, the poet, and the hunter.

The climate of Alberta is superior—Winter and Summer—to the climate of Germany or Illinois or Minnesota or New Hampshire. Indeed, its Summer climate is ideal and its Winter climate is softened and tempered by the warm southwest winds that blow over from the Pacific Ocean. Moreover, Alberta has coal deposits far surpassing thosa of England or Pennsylvania in extent and value. It is intersected by mighty rivers that flow onward from the great mountains in the West to their final destination in Hudson Bay or in the Gulf of Mexico. One river, the Bow, is being utilized near Calgary to irrigate 3,000,000 acres of land, and, strange to say, this great irrigation project at Calgary is the best, the most extensive, and the greatest economic irrigation achievement on the American Continent. When completed it will cost $5,000,000, but it will have transformed a wilderness of 3,000,000 acres into gardens and grain fields and pasture lands worth $300,000,000.

It is curious how little the world knows of a country covering 150,000,000 acres of territory. It is a mighty inland empire, and it is growing faster than Illinois or Ohio grew fifty years ago. It has better railroad facilities than any Western State of the American Republic, save perhaps the State of Washington, and with the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the great extensions planned by the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian Northern Alberta farmers will have the best shipping facilities of any farmers on the continent. It is an extraordinary thing to find the farmers of Alberta getting their wheat and hogs and cattle to European markets at less cost than the farmers of Kansas and Nebraska can get their products to the same markets. And it is still more extraordinary to find that the great immigration now flowing into Alberta consists mainly of people from Kansas and Nebraska and Minnesota and Ohio and Illinois.

"I have never seen a finer class of people," said William Toole of Calgary to me the other day, "than those now coming to Alberta to settle. They are mostly from the States, farmers who have sold out their lands there at the high prices of prosperous times. They come here and buy land cheap, and begin over again to change the wilderness into gardens and wheat fields and meadows."

Banff is four hours' ride in a Canadian Pacific palace car from Calgary. The railroad runs through the valley of the Bow from Calgary to Banff, and all the way is a lovely panorama of river and dale and forest and mountains. At Banff the south fork of the Bow joins the main river, and in the angle of the two rivers on a high and picturesque bluff is built the finest tourist hostelry in the world—the great Canadian Pacific Hotel at Banff. It stands almost in the centre of a natural park—3,400,000 acres. This is the great national park of Canada, and it is sacred forever to the poet, the artist, and the dreamer. Away to the south from the hotel stretches the magnificent river that connects the Bow with wonderful mountain lakes. They are twenty miles away, and the Dominion Government is constructing an excellent road to connect with them. Next year these lakes amid the mountains and the glaciers can be reached in a carriage or in an automobile from the hotel.

This road will run through a valley of enchanting loveliness. On either side are mountains grand and precipitous that tower into the clouds. You see the river down below dancing in the sunlight, and hear it making music in the gorges and cañons as it rushes onward. And what a scene of sylvan splendor those woods afford! Pine and tamarack and birch and maple are spread out in glorious confusion. They clothe every vale and dell and glen, and they carpet the precipitous mountain slopes where the boldest hunter can never hope to climb. The dark green of the fir or pine is the predominating color of these forests, but everywhere from the crags and crests of mighty mountains to the banks of the rushing torrents in the gorges below this dark green is mixed with the purple and gold of deciduous trees in all the radiant splendor of Autumnal glow.

We walked this valley in the early morning, and every now and then from some vantage point along this noble highway we gazed in rapture and delight upon the scenes before us. Surely human eye never rested before on scenes so radiantly beautiful as those which unrolled themselves before us at Banff in the radiant sunlight of an early Autumn. How paltry seem the glories of the Alps and the Apennines while gazing on the sublime splendors of these Canadian Rockies. The skies above the mountains and the clouds are bluer than the bluest of skies of Italy, and mingled with the clouds and sky are snowy peaks and frowning crags and monumental summits of bare and rugged rock, whereon neither tree nor moss, nor lichen, nor any form of animal or vegetable life had ever germinated or was destined to live. These frowning mountains of barren granite, rising here and there from the midst of so much beauty and radiance and life, add an element of weirdness and grandeur to this enchanting land.

The Dominion National Park at Banff will yet become the Mecca of the poets and painters and dreamers of the world. For sublime natural beauty, it is unsurpassed and unsurpassable. Its lakes and rivers and its ravines and torrants have the hue of the emerald. Deer and caribou and game of all kinds abound throughout the park, and all are under the protection of the Dominion, save the bear.

The Dominion National Park of Banff covers a considerably greater area than the State of Connecticut or the great Yellowstone National Park. The building of roads through this Park and the protection and preservation of its wondrous natural beauty has been religiously undertaken by the Government of Canada. It permits the angler to fish in the lakes and rivers, and the hunter to chase bear, but that is all. Save for the Canadian Pacific, which runs right through the Park, and the great hotel upon tha bluff above the river and a few hamlets and cottages for tourists here and there, the scenary of this wondrous land is such as it was when man first began to trouble the planet with his presence. Century after century has rolled on since then and yet all the beauty and grandeur and sublimity of this region were unknown. If seen at all for a thousand ages, it was only occasionally by a painted savage, and even now its glories are unknown only to the few, for the toiling millions of humanity have little time to see the beautiful and sublime and but rare thought for the enchanting loveliness which the lavish hand of the Almighty

CHAT OF THE STUDIOS.

EDWIN DAVIS FRENCH, the noted book plate engraver of Saranac Lake, N. Y., has added a number of his more recent plates to the collection formed by the late S. P. Avery, which he has presented to the print department of the New York Public Library.

He has also sent the Curator a manuscript continuation of the catalogue of his work, issued by Paul Lemperly in 1899, which manuscript record is unique.

During the Summer the print department has received also among other gifts a number of prints by American artists, including over four hundred proofs of wood engravings by the late F. Juengling, and also numerous etchings by Samuel Colman.

It is desired to form as representative a collection as possible of etchings, lithographs and wood engravings by American artists. A number of artists have already given collections of their work, and ready response has been met with from a number of descendants of deceased artists such as A. B. Durand, Alfred Jones, James Smillie, and Robert Blum.

George H. Story, Acting Director of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, has issued a second edition of his illustrated catalogue of the museum. The demand for this work has been widespread all over the country, and Mr. Story has received letters of commendation in regard to the publication from many of the representative art directors and connoissaurs of Europe. Twenty extra illustrations will embellish the new edition.

Filade Bertieri, a young Italian artist of this city, who has painted portraits of several well-known society people, has taken a studio at 27 West Sixty-seventh Street, and will receive on Saturdays. Mr. Bertieri spent the Summer at Newport.

Alton Wiles of London, England, has joined the New York colony of artists and has opened a studio at 645 Madison Avenue. Mr. Wiles passed the Summer on Long Island, where he painted an attractive series of water colors. He has also recently completed several miniatures, and will doubtless give an exhibition of his water colors and miniatures later in the season.

Alfred East of London and Charles Cottet of Paris, members of the International Jury of Selection at Carnegie Institute, were recent visitors in New York as guests of John W. Beatty, Art Director of the Pittsburg Museum.

Alfred East is one of the best known landscape painters in England of the present day, and is an associate member of the Royal Academy. Charles Cottet, who perhaps is not quite so well known here, is an eminent artist of France, and is represented in the Luxembourg, Paris, and also in many private collections abroad. While here these artists visited the principal art galleries in Fifth Avenue, and also called on a number of prominent confreres. Over one thousand pictures have been entered at the Pittsburg exhibition.

Four centuries of art are illustrated in an interesting arrangement of masterpieces now on view at the Knoedler Galleries.

The paintings range from a Ruysdael of the Seventeenth Century to Corot of the Nineteenth, and Harpignies and Cazin of the Twentieth Century.

The Corots displayed include two small canvases: "Dance of the Shepherds," with Italian background, and "The Seine at Mantes," showing a cathedral spire in the distance.

Veteral Henri Harpignies is represented by his large picture of the Maritime Alps, with convincing en plein air effect, and painted in broad masses, illustrating the marked advance in art from the Seventeenth Century, when every detail was carefully evolved.

Paul Nocquet, sculptor of "The Football Players" recently presented to the Columbia University Club by Isaac N. Seligman, and who also executed the statue of the "Yawning Woman," now at the New Gallery on West Thirtieth Street, has returned from an outing in the Adirondacks, and has reopened his studio in East Fifty-ninth Street. Mr. Nocquet will give an exhibition of his statuary this season.

Henry Mosler, the well-knowu genre painter, has sailed recently for France and Italy, where he will spend the Winter in pursuit of fresh subjects for his brush. Mr. Mosler is accompanied by his daughter, Miss Agnes Mosler, and a son, Gustave Henry Mosler.

J. J. Shannon, the brilliant American painter who has conquered London, where he has been honored with an associate membership in the Royal Academy, will return to New York this year, and will open a studio in the city.

He was very successful in his portraiture here last season, and returns to his native heath to fulfill several important commissions. At the Carnegie Institute last year Mr. Shannon was represented by a characteristic example from his brush: "Lady Marjorie Manners."

T. Chartran, the French portrait painter, who has found profit and a ready demand for his portraiture in this country, will return to New York this season. He will open a studio here.

THE "ASTORIAN" DECISION.

"COMMEND me to William Waldorf Astor for having things done on short notice." The speaker was a traveler, fresh home from England, who then went on to tell of how the present palatial home of The Pall Mall Gazette came to be built, giving as his authority for the story T. P. O'Connor, or, as all England and half the rest of the English-speaking world knows him better, "Tay Pay."

Mr. Astor was signing checks in connection with his paper. "What's this for?" asked he, as one was placed before him. "Taxes, Sir"—and Mr. Astor signed without comment. "And this one?" he said, as the next pinkish slip was handed over. "Office rent, Sir." Mr. Astor laid down his pen.

"I've got to pay taxes—that's quite proper; but I fail to see why I should be held up for rentals. If it pays some other fellow to put up a building and lease it to me, it'll pay me quite as well to put up one for myself and rent out as much of it as I don't care to use myself." Then he turned to his "right hand" man and added: "I want new offices. Make all arrangements. Look after things in that connection for six months and then tell me what's been done. What item comes next?"

And so the splendid offices of to-day were duly erected.

RECRUITS FOR OUR ARMY.

"RECRUITING?" The keen-eyed Major who has charge of the recruiting office on Third Avenue swung around in his swivel chair.

"This is the dull season for recruiting. There is no other time of the year when there are so few enlistments."

"For what reason? Oh, the election, I think. The men can get more work and better pay outside just now, so they are not so anxious to join the army."

"Then it isn't always patriotism that makes them enlist?"

The kindly faced officer shook his head.

"No. Sometimes it's because they're out of work and hard up. Others join the army through love of adventure, but there are some," the fighting man's blue eyes kindled; "there are some who join for love of country."

A slender, fair-haired boy, who looked nearer seventeen than twenty, entered the room. He had passed the physical examination and safely run the gantlet of the other departments and had at last reached the final court. The recruiting officer looked the boy over with a military keenness that was not unkindly.

"Your age?" he asked in a brisk tone.

"Twenty-one," answered the boy.

"Will your parents certify to that?"

"I have none," said the youth steadily, but with a nervous fingering of his soft hat. "I'm an orphan."

The officer asked him several other questions and brought the interview to an abrupt close.

"I can't take you in to-day," he said, and as the boy's face clouded, he added: "Bring certifications as to your age and character and a recommendation from the last man for whom you worked. If they are satisfactory I'll enlist you to-morrow."

"It's his age," explained the Major. "He doesn't look anywhere near 21."

"But can't boys of 18 enlist?"

"Certainly, but not without their parents' consent. They have to bring papers from their parents and letters of recommendation before we'll take them."

"And married men?"

"Generally speaking, in times of peace they're barred. Unless the Colonel of some regiment is willing to take a married man it is against the regulations to enlist him. You understand there's no provision made by the Government for the support of the families of soldiers. The men cannot live with their families, and it is out of the question to move them about the country, so the benedicts are practically barred from the ranks.

"Yes, indeed, they sometimes slip in. They desert their wives, and think they can escape in that way. And some of them, if they get tired of army life, or think they are in any danger, resurrect these wives, as it were, and use them as an excuse for their discharge from the service. Then they are dishonorably discharged for having enlisted by fraud.

"Most of the applicants prefer the infantry and artillery to the cavalry because there is much less work in the first two. A cavalryman has to take care of his horse as well as his equipments; he has the work of the infantryman and about as much again. On the field, when camp is pitched, he has to look out for his horse before he can attend to his own wants. The artillery offers the most advantages. The men like to be stationed at home here along the coast, where most of the artillery is.

"On an average in this office we have from 1,200 to 1,500 enlistments a year. For the past few years San Francisco has broken the record for enlistments, but that is because there are more re-enlistments there than anywhere else. All the soldiers brought back from the Philippines land in San Francisco, and the great number of those who again enter the army enlist in the Western city."

DYSPEPTIC PHILOSOPHY.

A man should do all in his power to make a woman happy. If necessary, he should even quarrel with her.

Charity begins at home when it wants to cover a multitude of sins.

There is a time in every man's life when he realizes what a chump he once was.

The people who don't go to church can't expect to keep up with the gossip of the neighborhood

The social scale is by no means life's most reliable weighing machine.

The height of folly and the depth of despair are not so far apart as they sound.

Matches made in heaven are not to be made light of.

Borrowing trouble becomes a habit. I know a fellow who became so addicted to it that he ran off with another man's wife.

Strike while the iron is hot, of course, but don't burn your fingers.

A woman's conscience resembles her garter in its elasticity.

The fellow with money to burn doesn't have to go begging for a light.

HOW ALL JAPS CHEAT.

WHILE Minister Takahira was at Portsmouth, he one morning chanced to overhear a remark made by a Rockingham guest, who ventured the opinion that lazy and slothful nations naturally disliked the earnest, progressive little Japs—disliked them because they dreaded them. Half smilingly the diplomat from the Land of the Rising Sun turned and, with an apology for taking part in the conversation, said: "Excuse me, gentlemen, but I heard only the other day something which bears most closely upon what you say.

"It was in Washington, and two ladies whom I have the honor of knowing were talking. Said one: 'The Japanese should be excluded from America. No sooner do their young men come over here and matriculate in our schools and colleges but they begin a systematic course of cheating.'

"'You don't say so,' exclaimed the other; 'why how is that?'

"'Quite simple,' returned the first speaker. 'They only pay for one tuition, and they always learn at least enough for two.'"

Tom—What did that telephone girl say to you when she broke the engagement?
Jack—Ring off.

A Matter for Thanks.

Pessimist—But, praise be, we can make our own enemies.

De Style—What is your son's college cry?
Gunbusta—For money, generally.

THE Philadelphia PUBLIC LEDGER, always a factor in this community, is now more prominent than ever, its recognized position as the best medium for clean, reputable advertising intended to reach people of discriminating tastes being undisputed.

Modern methods in all departments, bright, newsy articles on all current topics, the news of the day presented in a decent manner, the rejection of all soiled medical and unreliable financial advertising, have combined to place the PUBLIC LEDGER in the front as the ideal home newspaper while adding to its value to the business world.

AS AN EVIDENCE of the daily increasing patronage of a majority of the constant advertisers in Philadelphia may be cited the phenomenal increase in amount of advertising carried by the PUBLIC LEDGER during September of 1905 as against September of 1904:

JULIAN MITCHELL'S PRODUCTION

"Wonderland," the brilliant spectacle with many clever features; as a pageant it is a dream of beauty, which brings new laurels to Mr. Julian Mitchell. "Wonderland," which is a thing of beauty, will be a joy for a long time.—EVE. SUN.

WON-DER-LAND

"Wonderland" a delightful place. Julian Mitchell's play at the Majestic scores a marked success; wonders in colors seen; bright book, tuneful music, and wholesome humor constitute trio of winning qualities in the play. For the blues go to "Wonderland," the brightest, jolliest, most tuneful place since "Toyland."—HERALD.

Music by Victor Herbert. Book by Glen MacDonough.

"Wonderland" is a glamour of scenery. Presents pictures as from the canvas of an artist. The new spectacle is aptly named; it is thoroughly characteristic of its producer, and a good successor to its two brilliant predecessors, "Babes in Toyland" and "The Wizard of Oz."—MORNING WORLD.

"Wonderland" is beautiful and tuneful. It is to Mr. Mitchell and to Mr. Herbert that nearly all the praise belongs. They make "Wonderland" deserve its name.—EVE. WORLD.

"Wonderland" good enough for any Alice. It is a capital show for the young idea, and when you can say that you can feel quite certain that it will capture the old idea. The rankest pessimist would have found something with which to dispel his gloom.—AMERICAN.

It is impossible to see the new production without being reminded of "The Wizard of Oz" and "Babes in Toyland." The staging of "Wonderland" is quite on a par with and distinctly reminiscent of the staging of its two predecessors.—GLOBE.

Almee Angeles, Bessie Wynn, Lotta Faust, Chas. Barry, James Marlowe, Geo. McKaye, and Sam Chip and Eva Davenport.

Julian Mitchell has thrown about this musical play a picturesque charm equalling if not excelling his work in the staging of "Babes in Toyland" and "It Happened in Nordland." Herbert has supplied many melodious airs.—PRESS.

Pretty girls and pretty music in "Wonderland." It is, in fact, a very elaborate sort of entertainment, with many changes of scene to keep the interest up and enough variety to satisfy many tastes.—TIMES.

"A fine, strong moving play. Mme. Kalich is an actress of undisputable ability. The whole performance was artistic in its completeness of detail."—Evening Post.

"Aided by the beauty of the scenery and the richness of the costumes, the result was an imaginative and atmospheric realism that has never been surpassed on any stage, and seldom or never equalled."—Sun.

"Mme. Kalich scores a success. A suitable performance and a production of very great beauty. Pure poetry in its simplicity, yet it scales the very heights of romance."—Evening Sun.

"For a generation or more the world has cried out for a great new tragic poet in the theatre. Last night New York got its first proof that the modern spirit is compatible with tragic poetry. Monna Vanna is a great poetic tragedy like Macbeth or Othello, yet it is full of the spirit of the twentieth century."—Brooklyn Eagle.

SOCIETY AT HOME AND ABROAD

THE suburban season is drawing to a close. It has this peculiarity. Everything rushes to a climax, and to use a Wall Street expression, the following morning there is a slump. Hostesses know that just now men in town are immersed in politics, and that it would be folly to attempt to entertain there until after the election. But there is always the week-end holiday, and there is a rush out into the country beginning on Friday, and by Sunday New York, as far as fashionable society is concerned, is much in the same state as in midsummer.

Last week the gayeties centred at Tuxedo. Mr. and Mrs. Henry S. Redmond's dinner and dance, the Living Pictures, and the annual ball at the Casino have been the principal features. Each season has its specialty, and this Winter the Tuxedo set of débutantes will be in the majority. They were well represented at the entertainments at the Park, and their number was reinforced by several from the Meadow Brook colony and from other places. It was a delight to the still young matrons who made their débuts twenty years ago to have Amos French lead the cotillion with the absndon and skill which was characteristic of the men of that day, who were better dancers than the present generation. It was in this school that Elisha Dyer, third, first learned his paces, and he has been keeping it up ever since.

This week it will he the turn of Meadow Brook and Long Island. In addition to the daily meets of the Hunt and the tri-weekly drags, there will be the dance given by Mr. and Mrs. J. Smith Hadden for Miss Hadden, who is a débutante of the Winter, and on election day the steeple chase and pony races at the country seat of Gould Brokaw. House parties prevail all the time, and it is very jolly down Hempstead way.

Miss Hadden will be quite a notable débutante. Her mother was Miss Hamilton, daughter of the late Augustus Hamilton, and her father is a brother of Alexander and John Hadden. On her mother's side she is a cousin of the Robert Remsens and other well-known New Yorkers. Mrs. Smith Hadden has shared with Mrs. James L. Kernochan and Mrs. Ladenburg the reputation of being one of the best women cross-country riders in the United States. She is devoted to hunting and seldom misses a meet. Mr. and Mrs. Smith Hadden have lived at Hempstead for some years and are identified with the social life of that set.

Plans for the bringing out of débutantes have not yet matured. After the Horse Show there will be a certain number of receptions, afternoons more than in the evening, and small dinners followed by parties to the play and a dance with supper. These methods of entertaining have taken the place to some extent of the older-fashioned débutantes' tea, but there will be also many of these given by the more conservative element. They bring together old friends and lift families out of temporary retirement. Every day one hears of a new débutante, and, although there will not be as many as there were last year, those who are to make their bow come as a class from a wealthier and more conspicuous set.

So far it is not known whether Miss Pulitzer will make her début this Winter in New York or not. She has gone out a little in Washington and also at Tuxedo. She is an exceedingly pretty girl, with an exquisite complexion and much charm of manner. Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Pulitzer have gone abroad on their honeymoon trip. There were several well-known departures last week. The Duchess of Marlborough finally did get away. Her visit here was one series of entertainments, arranged by her many girl friends and those of her mother and her family. Those who ten years ago knew the Duchess as Miss Vanderbilt, a simple, unaffected girl, saw little or no change in this charming American young woman. She was exactly the same. There was always a certain calm dignity about her and a frank, artless manner. She has made the most brilliant match in point of family and position of any American girl in the last twenty-five years. She has won the hearts of the English people, is a great favorite with royalty, and is one of the grandes dames in London society. She is unspoiled, delighted to meet her friends of other days, and enjoyed every minute of her time here.

The week brought back the venerable Mrs. Yznaga, who has been visiting her daughters, Consuelo, Duchess of Manchester, and Lady Lister Pepys Kaye. Consuelo, Duchess of Manchester, spent a part of the Summer in Scotland. Next week will sail for this country Mrs. Ogden Goelet, the mother of the Duchess of Roxburghe, who comes here with her sister, Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt. Cornelius Vanderbilt and Mr. and Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish have been on an inspection tour through the South and middle West in a special car.

The long heralded visit of Prince Louis of Battenberg and his suite draws near. New York, from a social point of view, will see little of the Prince, as his time has all been mapped out for him, and his stay at the home of Mrs. Ogden Mills will be the principal social affair. The other few days of his sojourn will be taken up with public festivities and official banquets and receptions. The ball to be given on the Blake will be more or less of an official character, as it will be necessary to have an extended invitation list. One of the last receptions given to visiting royalty was that in 1892 in honor of the Infanta Eulalie and her husband, Prince Antoine.

Mrs. Vanderbilt and Miss Gladys Vanderbilt have been paying visits to their relatives, but have kept The Breakers open. Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt went to the Chicago Horse Show. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney are at their place on Long Island, where has also been Miss Dorothy Whitney, who will make her début this Winter. The luncheon given at Florham last Saturday was not for the Duchess of Marlborough. It was the annual affair at which Mrs. Twombly entertains her neighbors each Autumn. The season at Lenox is about closing. Several of the villas will be kept open until after Thanksgiving. Mr. and Mrs. Westinghouse have been among the chief entertainers at this Berkshire resort recently, and Mr. and Mrs. William Pollock gave a barn dance at their country home.

Mrs. Albert R. Shattuck and her mother, Mrs. William L. Strong, have returned from abroad. They have been touring with Mr. Shattuck in Germany and Austria in a motor car. Mr. and Mrs. Shattuck are to make some artistic improvements to their home. The dining room is to be modeled from a similar apartment in one of the chateaus of the Loire, and the ceiling will be an exact copy of the one in France. Mrs. Samuel Newhouse is in town, having arrived on the Oceanic. She will be in America a part of the Winter, going to the Far West to visit relatives. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Drayton have returned from their wedding trip, which was taken in a motor car. J. R. Roosevelt was also on the passenger list of one of the incoming ships last week. Mr. and Mrs. Norrie Sellar and Miss Aubray Sellar and Mrs. F. S. Whitridge and Miss Whitridge arrived on the Caronia on Wednesday. Cooper Hewitt sailed last week for a short visit to the other side.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Laurens Van Alen, who have closed their villa at Newport, were at the St. Regis on Thursday. They are to make a short visit to Canada before settling in New York for the Winter. Mr. and Mrs. John J. Wysong have also closed their Newport house. They are to be in Lenox for a fortnight before coming to New York. Mrs. May Brady Hall and her sister, Mrs. Katherine Harris, are at Hot Springs, Va., which is quite crowded with New Yorkers at the present time.

+ + +

For the next month there will be a series of Autumn weddings. To-morrow will take place that of Franklin Butler Lord, Jr., and Miss Lillian Barker, daughter of Mrs. Fordyce D. Barker. The ceremony will be at Grace Church. Miss Jessie Sloane will be the maid of honor, and among the bridesmaids are Miss Sibyl Douglass, Miss Ruth Vanderbilt Twombly, Miss Martha McCook, Miss Margaret D. Dix, Miss Virginia Murray, and Miss Violet D. Cruger. Mr. Lord's attendants include Charles L. Lawrence, Buel Hollister, W. White, Sheldon Whitehouse, Seton Porter, Clarence Young, Payson Merrill, Cortlandt Dixon, and Lawrence Rand.

On Tuesday there will be a number of New Yorkers going over to Brooklyn for the wedding of Miss Anna Curtis Low, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William G. Low, to Herbert Grant Watson of England. The ceremony will take place at Grace Church on the Heights, and will be followed by a reception at the Low residence. Mrs. Low and her daughter have recently returned from abroad.

On Wednesday—All Saints' Day—Miss Anita Evans, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. Clay Evans, will be married to Lieut. David Foot Sellers in Washington, and on the same day Miss Edith A. Jackson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip N. Jackson, will be married to Thatcher Adams, Jr., in Newark, at the Third Presbyterian Church. Mrs. Lewis Stevens, who was married yesterday, and who is a sister of the bride, will be matron of honor. John B. Adams, John F. Talmage, Frederick A. M. Schleffelin, John C. Greenleaf, Robert McKean Thomas, Thomas S. Adams, Robert Cushing Green, Henry Brevoort Kane, John McLane, Thomas L. Clarke, and Wolcott Jackson will be among the attendants.

There will be a quiet wedding in town on Wednesday, Nov. 1. The bride will be Miss Mary Honey, daughter of Samuel Honey, and the bridegroom Josiah Quincy of Boston. Only intimate friends and relatives will attend the ceremony, which will be held at Grace Church. On Thursday Bryce Metcalf, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Betts Metcalf, will marry Miss Susie Hall, daughter of Mrs. John Hall. Owing to the family being in mourning there will be no reception, and the ceremony will take place at the residence of the bride's mother. Among the ushers will be Harris Rhinestock, T. Tileston Wells, Frank Hillhouse, Peyton J. Van Rensselaer, Lamont Dominick, John Hubbard, and Edward L. Hall.

The wedding of Kenneth Robinson and Miss May Hadden will take place at the Church of the Incarnation on Dec. 12. Miss Hadden will have her sister as maid of honor. There will be no bridesmaids, The best man will be William A. Hutcheson, and the ushers Wainwright Parish, Alexander M. Hadden, William A. Hadden, and Harold Farquhar Hadden, Jr. The wedding reception will be held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Hadden, 5 East Seventy-sixth Street.

The first entertainment in town for the season will be given by Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Sanford Carpenter on Nov. 5. It will be a dinner dance for three young couples who are to be married in November. These are Miss Cora Carpenter, the daughter of the house, and George Albert Legge, who are to be married on Nov. 15; Miss Dorothy Manson and Killaen Van Rensselaer, who are to be married on Nov. 23, and Miss Helen Fargo and Nathaniel F. Moore, whose wedding takes place on Nov. 8.

Miss Carpenter is to have Miss Grace Fargo as maid of honor at her wedding at St. Bartholomew's Church, and the Misses Wilhelmina Claflin, Esther Thomlinson, Constance Johnson, Louise Vanderhoef, Cornelia Young, and Laura Anderson of Colorado Springs as bridesmaids. H. Bertram Legge will be best man, and the ushers William Koch, Freeman Anderson Smith, John O. Donohue, George Welch, H. Rosetta Worthington, and Bedell Harned.

Miss Manson and Mr. Van Rensselaer will be married at St. Bartholomew's. Miss Julia A. Trowbridge will be maid of honor, and the bridesmaids the Misses Mary Barton Atterbury and Ellen Mercer Atterbury, Gladys Durant Rice, Anita L. Peabody, Emily Foster, and Clara Ellsworth. Charles Edmund Fairfax will be best man, and the ushers William Van Rensselaer Erving, Louis H. Hosmer, Henry Pendleton Rogers, Jr., Joseph Laurence Myers, Thomas Lincoln Manson, Jr., and Vance S. Manson. The reception will be held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Manson, 23 East Sixty-ninth Street.

News of the alarming illness of Edward Bulkeley at Newport was telegraphed from that place last week. Mr. Bulkeley was very ill two years ago in Washington. He is one of the best known of the bachelors, and is a contemporary of Reginald Ronalds and Craig Wadsworth. He has lately returned from a trip around the world with Mr. and Mrs. Livingston Beeckman. His sisters are Mrs. Redmond, Mrs. Reginald Rives, and Mrs. Prescott Lawrence. Mrs. Lawrence is with him. She has a daughter who is to make her début this Winter.

Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt returned last week from abroad. They will be at Idle Hour during the Autumn. Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., are coming up from Long Island, and are to be in town during November. Among the recent arrivals from abroad was Mrs. Foxhall Keene, who has been motoring through Europe with Mrs. James Brown Lord and Mrs. Valle Biacque.

+ + +

The death of Baron Leigh will make the Hon. Mrs. Francis Dudley Leigh Lady Leigh. She was Miss "Baby" Beckwith of this city, an heiress and beauty of twenty-five years ago. She was married in London to the present Baron Leigh when she was a guest there of Mr. and Mrs. Bradley Martin. The Leigh country seat is at Kenilworth and is most picturesque and historic.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

MRS. EDWIN MAIN POST, a picture of whom with her sons appears in the Pictorial Supplement, was Miss Emily Bruce Price, a daughter of the late Bruce Price, architect and writer, who died only a year or two ago. She has remarkably clear-cut features and beautiful coloring, brown hair and eyes, and creamy skin, and is not merely handsome and prominent in society in both New York and Tuxedo, making her home at the latter place, but is a clever authoress as well. Her novelette of last year was much talked of, and is a decidedly clever delineation of society life and morals abroad. Mrs. Post is related to a number of prominent New York families, and attends nearly all of the smartest society functions in New York.

Mrs. James Roosevelt, a portrait of whom may be found in the Pictorial Section, was Miss Sara Delano and a member of the old Delano family. Her husband, the late James Roosevelt, was an uncle of the President. Mrs. Roosevelt's son, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, married his cousin, several times removed, Miss Eleanor Roosevelt, last March at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parish, Jr. Mrs. Roosevelt is a woman of much dignity and grace.

Mrs. Isaac Newton Seligman, a reproduction of whose charming portrait with her children is in the Supplement, was Miss Greta Loeb. Mrs. Seligman and her family live at 36 West Fifty-fourth Street, where she gives many artistic as well as elaborate entertainments.

+ + +

Mrs. Attilio Morosini, a picture of whom may be found on the first page of the Supplement, has had a rather romantic life. She was Miss Mary Washington Bond, being named for the Washington family of whom George Washington was a member and from which family she is a descendant. She made practically her first appearance in New York—her home being in New Jersey—at one of the Charity Balls at the Waldorf, where Col. John Jacob Astor was her partner in the dance. She attracted much attention at the time, as she was a handsome blonde of fine figure and pure blonde beauty, with yellow hair and blue eyes and a pink and white skin. Shortly after this Attilio Morosini, a son of the banker, began paying her attentions, and a secret marriage ensued. It was not until the birth and serious illness of a little son that the marriage was announced and the wealthy banker's son was forgiven by his parents. It was the second secret marriage in the Morosini family.

King Edward was the guest this past week of Lord and Lady Londesborough at Londesborough Park, in Yorkshire, for four days' shooting. He arrived there on Monday. As Prince of Wales he was a great friend of the late Lord Londesborough, and as guest he twice was Londesborough Park contains fine lakes and picturesque waterfalls, and in the church in the village there is, among other monuments to the members of the Clifford family, a painting of the wife of Sir John Clifford, erected by the "Shepherd King."

Miss Eloise Breese—niece of Miss Eloise Breese of this city, the latter one of the very few women who can fly the New York Yacht Club burgee, whose engagement to Lord Willoughby de Eresby was announced some weeks since, has secured as her parti a much-engaged man, for no less than three former engagements of his, including that to Miss Muriel Wilson of Tranby Croft, have fallen through. If there is, however, any truth in the old adage, "three times and out," Lord Willoughby is now doomed to the altar.

The younger Miss Eloise Breese has spent most of her time in England for some years, as her mother, soon after the death of her first husband, William Lawrence Breese of Lawrence, L. I., married Henry Vincent Higgins, better known as Harry Higgins. The latter is six feet three, and at one time was an officer of the First Life Guards. He and the Countess de Gray manage the Covent Garden Opera, and for his success he was recently decorated by the King with the Victorian Order. Mr. Higgins is the son of "Jacob Omnium," of The London Times.

Miss Breese has visited here with her mother since the latter's second marriage. She is a niece of James L. Breese, and a cousin of Sidney Breese.

COATS AND GOWNS.

WITH the advent of November, bringing with it chill winds and stormy days, heavier coats are considered, and the homely but useful raincoat comes to the fore for the woman who walks, although many street costumes in coats and skirts of various cuts, the former always plain and the latter always short, are made up especially for stormy weather, thus doing away with the raincoat altogether.

Perhaps the best model for a rainy weather costume is a tight coat with skirts coming half way to the knees and loose both as to body and sleeves, but may be belted in to the figure. Collars and cuffs of a contrasting color or a different shade are also seen. A rich red silk coat of this sort with big white pearl buttons and white water-proof velvet showing in the collar and cuffs is a cheering sight in a rainstorm, especially if the day be chilly.

Several manufacturers are having brought out this Autumn plain, almost tight fitting ulsters of water-proofed goods, but these are best suited to the means of those who cannot afford many wraps or only a very few. Still there are a few women who won't wear loose raincoats, and these will suit this class.

A rather odd combination of colors worn at an English wedding combined blue, white, yellow, and violet. The bridesmaids' frocks were made of blue taffeta with bolero jackets of Irish crochet. Their hats were white beaver trimmed with blue plumes, and their necklaces were slender gold chains having pearl and amethyst pendants. Each carried a large bouquet of yellow chrysanthemums.

At an Irish wedding there was a much prettier combination of wreaths of pink heather and white tulle veils for the bridesmaids. These topped pink gowns.

Many of the new hats and toques for walking, informal luncheons, and traveling are trimmed with black quills having the stems gilded. They make rather a smart trimming for decoration for all black hats, and in many instances are placed across the front, slanting from one side to the other.

Miss Katharine McCann wears a turban hat—it is really too large to be termed a turban—with a big black quill with a gilded stem across the front, and another black hat seen at Sherry's, and of the Amazon order, had two big black quills with gold stems at one side, slanting down toward the front.

Mrs. William Woodward is wearing one of the skirted coats, now so much the vogue for slender figures. This particular type of coat is worn with short skirts, and is usually almost tight fitting, with plaited skirts. Mrs. Woodward's has a plaited effect, and around the rather wide collar—wider than has been in fashion for plain coats in several years—is a narrow ruffle of white lace set in under the edge and showing perhaps three-quarters of an inch. The skirt is rather longer than the Summer mode for walking skirts, the ultra-smart length for walking skirts the past Summer having been six inches from the ground; even the more conservative who found the two inches from the ground originally ordered by them for their walking skirts a most uncomfortable length speedily had them shortened at least another inch. Six inches sounds shorter, when said, than it is in reality; it amounts to a length that is just right in stormy weather, and in pleasant and even in dusty streets and with low shoes it insures comparative cleanliness. The short skirt is, however, most trying to short, stout people, and in this as in most fashions of these latter days the thin women have the best of it, for bones makes a good foundation for full and short clothes.

Despite, however, the present craze, among women only, for thin figures, the corset sellers will tell any inquiring purchaser who sees woman after woman purchasing pads of all sorts for the various defective portions of her figure, that they have never sold more "improvers" of different kinds than to-day, and that false hips and other accessories are in great demand in order to produce the small-waisted, large-hipped, full-busted figure that the latest modes have pronounced the proper thing. But here again when tight-lacing is in some measure relied upon to produce the necessary outlines, the thin woman is again fortunate, for thin women can lace with much less discomfort than plump ones, and I doubt if the latter even do it unless for a few short hours at a time, though thin women as a rule have large waists and plump women small ones, both being seemingly natural.

If women would by the fashioning of their garments improve their figures or conceal their defects, instead of attempting to deceive a by no means blind public with numberless artifices, grace and beauty would far more often be the result than with the present devices.

Skinny arms should not be shown in short or diaphanous sleeves, nor flat chests outlined by close bodices, nor small hips defined by tight skirts, and above all, large waists should not be emphasized by belts of glaring colors and wide widths. No one with waist span of over twenty-one inches should ever wear a red belt, no matter if the hips and bust be generously full and wide, for in the latter case there is a certain vulgarity in emphasizing voluptuous charms that the innately refined woman avoids.

With a slight but rounded figure—and there are few of these, for most slender figures are bony—scarlet girdles do not clash, and a No. 2 or No. 3 shoe in scarlet is fetching; but, oh! what a difference another number makes in one's pedal extremities! Here the plump woman has the advantage, for her hands and feet are not only well covered with flesh, but both hands and feet are almost always much smaller in proportion to her height than those of the thin sisterhood.

Mrs. Glen Collins, who was Miss Nathalie Schenck, one of the bridesmaids of Miss Cathleen Neilson when she married Reginald Vanderbilt, and whose romantic meeting and marriage to C. Glen Collins filled much space in the newspapers at the time it took place, has just returned to New York with her mother and little child. Time was when Miss Schenck was almost stout, then she became almost thin after a severe illness, now she strikes the happy medium, and was never more handsome. She lunched at Sherry's the other day in a plain street costume topped by one of the latest Parisian creations in millinery, brought direct from Paris. It was a large hat, with considerable width, and while it extended out at the back and slanted down at the front, these details, so exaggerated in hats the past season, were much modified. The hat projected well over the brow, but with a notable lack of downward slant. It appeared, in a rather dim light, to be black felt, with velvet bows, and at the left side, near the front, was a rosette effect, not full, however, in feathers, from which radiated spokes in the shape of trimmed peacock feathers minus the eyes. These feathers were long at the centre top, where they spread out toward the back of the hat, and were much shorter at the sides and in the front were only a couple of inches long.

Mrs. Collins's costume was a smooth, dull, black cloth with walking skirts perhaps three inches from the floor, a box-like Eton coat closed in the front and coming a bit below the top of her belt. It had coat sleeves and was severely plain. Both coat and skirt were trimmed with bands of the material cut at intervals into picket points, the points being some two inches apart, thus breaking the continuity of the bands. The strips of cloth were from half to an inch in width and were stitched at their edges and also several times through the centre, each row of stitching being about a quarter of an inch from the next. There was a suggestion of black velvet piping to some of the bands, which, nevertheless, may have been given by the turning of the smooth cloth; the light being dim and the observance too cursory to be certain about this.

Mrs. George Gould, who is in town, is wearing a very pale gray, which suits her pronounced brunette beauty.

Her gray hat is rather small, and of the toque order, and her full, draped coat is of glistening silver gray broadcloth. This coat has full sleeves and the body is draped in some way so that it falls from the shoulders in graceful lines.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

The overshadowing influence in the markets of Europe at the week's end was the disordered state of the Russian Empire, and in some degree the uneasiness abroad was reflected by our own market. There have been other disturbances in Russia, such as that attended with such violence earlier in the year, which have not failed to find reflection on the European Bourses, but the effects have been passing, either because the Government was seen to be in complete control of the situation or because commercial and financial conditions were so sound at Berlin or Paris or London that investors and speculators alike refused to take fright at a situation which had arisen scores of times, only to dissipate in the end, having harmed no one. On these various accasions our own market has been even more indifferent than the foreign exchanges, an, as the event has proved, properly so. Whether in the present position of affairs there is room for more apprehension than heretofore may be questioned, but if there are any new factors, absent in the past and possibly present now, urging a closer scrutiny of the Russian disorders and their bearing on the stock market here, they arise not from our slight commercial and financial relations with Russia, but from the uncertainty over the results Rusela's troubles may have on European markets, especially that of Paris, which has placed the vaet wager of hundreds of millions of dollars on the stability of Russia's commercial, financial, and political institutions. The immediate effect of the railway strike and its ramifications thus far has been a decline of 4 points in Russian bonde and small losses in British consols and French rentes, together with heaviness on the Continental Bourses, for the account of which there has been rather liberal selling of securities on the London Exchange. It was for any extension of this Continental selling in the London market that financial observers here were on the alert. With nations as with individuals, in time of stress the investments which represent personal interests are safeguarded by funds obtained from the hurried eale of securities representing foreign enterprises. To buttress his holdings of Government and other home issues the German investor sells his newly acquired Canadian Pacific or Pennsylvania shares; to protect his rentes or his Russian holdings the French holder presses his Kaffir stocke on the London market, and the London market, which is thus forced to take the sales of both Berlin and Paris, to say nothing of the offerings of other Continental Exchanges, lightens its load in turn by selling the unwelcomed Canadian Pacific and Pennsylvania in the New York market, which is also compelled to buy back other American issues sold to protect Kaffirs and consols and other distinctively British securities. Near the close of the week there occurred such selling in the London market by the Continent and in this market by London, but in each instance the offerings were well absorbed, this being especially noteworthy in the case of the New York market. It seems doubtful if there is any menace to the market here from that source. While the present London settlement disclosed a heavy account in American securities, which are carried over at an exceptionally high interest rate, conditions in London are not otherwise unfavorable. In Berlin there has been extended speculation in steamship, coal, and iron and bank shares, and some activity in recently listed American issues, hut leading bankers have been warning their clients of the dangers in this movement, and the German Bank has been liquidating loans and strengthening its position. In Paris the Bank of France has gold holdings some $60,000,000 above its figures of a year ago, and French investors in Russian securities have become so inured to alarums, as a consequence of the frequent disasters to the Russian arms during the recent Japanese-Russian war, that their present phlegm overturns traditions and draws out the grudging applause of other European investors.

There is, however, one side to the Russian internal troubles which may have direct influence on our market. If the disorders become particularly threatening, Paris may decide to withdraw funds from London, and this, under the prevailing exchange conditions, might well lead to exports of gold from this city. Without any such stimulus and owing, as is well understood, to the unusually scanty supply of cotton bills, with which to cover the finance bills drawn earlier in the year, demand sterling has been steadily rising toward the gold export point. This was the case last week, as in the previous week, for the foreign bankers who accepted the finance bills during the Summer can now employ their funds at home at rates as remunerative as can be found here, and are calling for repayment at maturity. In the meantime the cotton bills which were expected to supply a vehicle for payments are not forthcoming. The exports of cotton have been disappointingly small. Since Sept. 1 exports, as compared with those of a year ago, have decreased some 435,000 bales, and, figured at $50 a bale, this has meant a deficit of some $21,750,000 in the supply of exchange. This situation alone has been making for exports, and did lead to at least one inquiry at the Assay Office on Thursday last, so that little additional impetus is needed to put the movement under way, and this may come if Paris decides to bring home more funds from London. The Paris cheque on London has fallen to 25f. 15c., and demand sterling here ranged at the week's end from 4.8710 to 4.8715. In the first week of July we sent $3,328,600 gold to France with the Paris cheque on London standing at 25f. 13½c. and demand sterling moving between 4.8705 and 4.8725. The full effects of the postponement of the Russian loan, a step forced by the disturbances at St. Petersburg, on the European money markets have not yet been estimated, but it would seem to imply, among other matters, protraction of the present hampered position of financial affairs abroad. Uncertainty as to the date of the issue of the loan might result in the keeping intact of the funds provided to meet it, and therefore make for easy money at European centres, but the unsettlement of sentiment attendant on such uncertainty would doubtless offeet the possibility of easier money rates. In addition to this, any delay in the issue of the Russian bonds must bring this demand upon the money market eo much nearer that entailed by any fresh Japanese financing, unless, indeed, this is susceptible of further postponement. Two other factors in the exchange situation, the one adverse and the other favorable, are the probable transmission ere long of Japanese funds now held here and the expected appearance of grain bills as a result of the present heavy export movement.

The Harriman interview on Friday, containing as it did the prediction of an era of competitive railroad building, presented in a new light the various railroad projects now under way or proposed in the West, particularly in the Northwest. The battle of injunctions between the Union Pacific and the Burlington in their contest for the North Platte regions assumed an importance in Wall Street discussion which is probably entirely unwarranted, and which in fact both Mr. Harriman and Mr. Hill hastened to point out as of no significance. It is too early to predict the outcome, but it may be safely said that the railroads of the West are in a far different financial position than were those lines which in the eighties entered headlong into competitive railroad construction, only to end up in bankruptcy. In any event, the additional transportation will be welcomed in regions where forests and fertile lands have awaited only adequate transportation facilities for their best development. The prosperity of the railroad world as a whole, and therefore of the territory served, was well reflected during the week in the remarkable orders for equipment placed with the car-building companies. It may be assumed that these orders represent the judgment of keen and competent railroad officers on the extent anad duration of the present business activity.

GOLD EXPORT POINT.

Extent to Which Exchange Market Must Change to Permit Gold Exports to Paris.

An advance of three-sixty-fourths of 1 per cent. in the rate of French cables or of another 20 points in the sterling exchange rate would make it possible to ship gold to France to be used there for the purchase of exchange on London. The figures are stated roughly, but they indicate the proximity of the exchange market to the gold export point. The figures given are based on the highest rate for sterling exchange quoted in this market last week, and the lowest rate in Paris for sterling exchange. These respectively were 4.8715 for demand sterling in New York and 25f. 14½c. in the Paris market for checks on London.

The question of gold exports based on triangular operations between this city, Paris, and London depends, of course, upon the relation existing between the New York and Paris sterling exchange rates on any given day. Each centime fluctuation in the Paris rate is equivalent to 20 points in our quotation. Thus a decline of half a centime in Paris and an advance of 10 points here would have the same effect upon the gold export question as an advance of 20 points here while the Paris rate remained unchanged.

There is of course no certainty about the movement of the market, but many bankers are inclined to the opinion that exchange is almost certain to advance further.

BORROWING EQUIPMENT.

A Practice of Some Railroads That Greatly Inconveniences Other Lines.

The car shortage question is one that is perhaps more vexatious to the railroads themselves than to shippers. In fact, shippers and their consignees are blamed by the railroads for a good part of the inconvenience and delay that arise in times like these, when there is urgent demand for all the equipment that the railroads of the country are able to keep in service. Failure to unload cars promptly is given in many cases as the first cause of lack of transportation facilities.

The railroads from time to time have adopted various measures to prevent the tying up of their equipment by the failure of consignees to return the cars promptly to the service of the railroad. That these measures have not been wholly effective is evident from the fact that the same complaint is again being heard from railroad officials.

When all the railroads are taxed to their utmost to supply cars to carry the merchandise offered to them for transportation some of the railroads themselves prey upon their fellows, much to the disgust and inconvenience of the victims. Lines that are not supplied with cars to the extent called for by current traffic frequently detain in their own service cars of other companies that come into their hands from other lines. Instead of returning these cars promptly to their owners they keep them and employ them as they would their own equipment. Of course, a per diem charge is made for the cars, but the borrowing road is willing enough to pay this to be able to handle an additional amount of traffic. The railroad owning the cars, on the other hand, would much prefer possession of the cars to the compensation paid to them for their use.

SUBSIDIARY COMPANIES

Magnitude of Insurance Companies' Banking Interests.

WHAT THE SYSTEM IS

Wall Street Interested in Outcome of Issue Over Insurance Investments in Banks and Trust Companies.

Wall Street is watching with considerable interest the development of the issue between Counsel Charles E. Hughee of the Insurance Investigating Committee and some of his committeemen, on the one hand, and the officials of the several life insurance companies on the other, as to the wiedom of having a life insurance establishment include the control of subsidiary banking institutions. The Street is perfeotly well aware that if the legislativs investigators should coincide with some of the earlier investigators of the Equitable in advocating the dieunion of the life insurance company and its allied concerns, some very important readjustments would have to be worked out before things ran smoothly again.

At the present time there are two classes of institutions within the sphere of life Insurance "influence"—those in which some particular company or the men interested in it are absolutely in control, and those in which two or more of the insurance companies are liberally represented. Examples of ths first class may be found in the Mercantile Trust, Equitable Trust, Commercial Trust, and Mercantile Safe Deposit Companies, as a part of ths Equitable Life's system; the United States Mortgage and Trust, Morton Trust, Guaranty Trust, Windsor Trust, Fifth Avenue Trust, Mutual Alliance Trust, Morristown Trust, and National Safe Deposit Company, in all of which Mutual Life interests predominate; in the National Shoe and Leather Bank and the Metropolitan Bank of the Metropolitan Life circls, and in the old New York Security and Trust Company and the Central National Bank, before its reorganization, among the companies strongly under New York Life influence.

A glance over this list, which doee not include various inetitutions outside of New York, shows at once the magnitude of the problem of readjusting the etock ownership in these companies ehould it become necessary, and when some of ths institutions are enumerated in which several life interests are represented etrongly, the task appears still more gigantic. Thus one might mention the National Bank of Commerce, which the Equitable and Mutual interests virtually control; the Title Guarantee and Trust Company, in which the Mutual, Equitable, and New York Life are represented, as well as the Standard Oil Party, the Lawyers Title Insurance Company, and the Lawyers Mortgage Company. In addition there are various safe deposit companiee, which, in the case of the Equitable Life, came in for a lot of criticism in the report of State Supsrintendsnt of Insurance Hendricks.

The officials of the Mutual, who have been questioned on the subject more closely than those of any other company, have sought their justification in the need experienced by a great life company doing a deferred dividend business for profitable opportunities for the investment of its funds and larger banking facilities than are afforded in its own cashier's department. Admitting this need, the next step is to an investment in a subsidiary institution, through which not only the desired facilities may be afforded, but an indirect profit realized on the operations which the life company does not perform for itself. In practical experience the profits of subsidiary companiee, and particularly those of trust companiee, have been very handsome. The Morton Trust, Guaranty Trust, and United States Mortgage and Trust Companies, for example, all pay 20 per cent. annually, ae doee the Mercantile Trust, while the Title Guarantee and Trust pays 16 per cent., the Equitable Trust and Lawyers Title Insurance Companies 10 per cent., the Fifth Avenue Trust 12 per cent., and so on. Even the Morristown Trust, which President McCurdy testified was estahlished "by some countrymen who wanted to see if it would pay," hae increased its annual dividends from a modest 6 per cent. to 18 per cent. since the Mutual took an interest in it in 1898.

In view of such resulta on the investment of life insurance asseta in bank or trust company stocks, the burden of proof lies at the outset with the investigator or critic who seeks to question the estahlished order of things. So it was with the entire life insurance system until the disclosuree of the past eight months began to come out, for the immense volume of assets plied up by the great companies during many years in the unquestioned control of several groups of men of large reputation in the financial community, made an impressive exhibit on which the word "Success" was written liberally and in big charactere. Mr. Hughes, however, accepted the challenge, and justified his temerity by a single question:

"Has this great establishment, marvelously euccessful from the standpoint of Wall Street, resulted in cheapening the cost of insurance to the insured proportionately with the growth of assets, gross profits, and ealaries?"

So Mr. Hughes undertook to inquire of the aotivities of the subsidiary companies themselves, to see just to what purposes the money of the life insurance companies waa turned when invested in such quarters, having in mind an observation of President McCurdy that the Mutual Life never went to subsidiary enterprises the success of which was not assured. From Treasurer Cromwell of the Mutual it was brought out that the company turned over to the Guaranty Trust and the United States Mortgage and Trust Companies one or more underwritings of a character that it didn't take itself, the explanation being that a trust company could go into many things that a life insurance company couldn't go into on account of the necessity it was under of providing absolutely safe investment for its funds.

Mr. Hughes and his witnesses were unable to agree when he aought information why the Mutual should receive from banks and trust companies in which it maintained deposits a lower rate of interest than was paid in many instances to other depositors. He was not satisfied with the reply that the Mutual, through its ownership of stock in the institutions in question, was enjoying some of the profit reaped by the use of its money deposited at low rates, and returned insistently to the question why the profits made on this money should be shared with other people and not reserved for the policy holders.

Another phase of the subsidiary company matter having a more direct bearing upon President McCurdy's assertion that the Mutual never went into enterprises the success of which was not assured, came up when attention was called to two of the enterprises that were promoted through the United States Mortgage and Trust Company. These were the Brooklyn Wharf and Warehouse Company and the Washington Traction and Electric Company, both of which had to go through reorganization before their securities were brought down to a stage that made an investment safe or profitable. Mr. Hughes did not appsar to care if in the one case the Mutual got in the reorganization securities that bid fair to be worth, both in market value and income return, more than ite original holdings, or if, in the other, the Mutual had already sold enough of its holdings in the reorganization to make the traneaction show a profit on ite books. The point he sought to establish was that in these instances the Mutual, directly, and through its holdings in the United States Mortgage and Trust Company, indirectly, had been led into an enterpriss that was of a speculative nature, as distinguished from one in which a sucoessful result is aseured in advance of the investment.

In the Equitable, the affairs of which have been exploited more thoroughly than thoee of any of the other great companies, various instances of this kind could be found, notably the ill-fated United States Shipbuilding Company, which has brought the Mercantile Trust Company into a muititude of euits by thoee who would recover for losses. In the New York Life, the loss of upward of $300,000 suffered in taking out of the New York Security and Trust Company a block of "undigested" New Orleans Traction securities when it was merged with the Continental Trust, is a case in point. The reply of the witneeses at the insurance inveetigation thus far has been that the assests of the companies have constantly increased and their solvency has remained unquestioned, no matter what the resulte in isolated casee.

E. H. HARRIMAN, who has introduced many new things into railroading, hae found time to devise still another. He hae ordered his passenger departments to print hereafter maps of the various Harriman roade showing the exact couree of the rails. Up to this time all railroad maps have printed the right of way as the shortest distance between two points. Mr. Harriman's maps will show circles and zigzags as they occur on his lines. This important etep probably will force other roads to abolish the maps showing their routes as the "crow flies."

GEORGE MULLARKY was the centre of interest for a while yeeterday in the Subway crowd on the curb. There was a selling movement at the time. At its height a broker with a large selling order entered the crowd wearing a flaming red tie. This was too much for the bulls. The red tie was torn off in a second, his hat was knocked in, and he was ejected unceremoniously from the crowd. All this was done by Mullarky, who got three cheers from the bulle.

NICHOLAS TERHUNE of the Great Northern Railway returned last week from Europe after the first long vacation he had been able to get since the Northern Securities Company began its strenuous existence in 1901. Mr. Terhune spent more time in England than in the other European countries which he visited. He was made to realize in England that Jamee J. Hill hae many stanch friends there.

E. ROLLINS MORSE, who has been a memher of the Stock Exchange since 1876, has arranged to transfer his seat to W. Forbes Morgan, Jr. Mr. Morgan is the junior member of the firm of E. Rollins Morse & Brother.

H. B. HOLLINS, Jr., with R. C. Watson, Jr., and J. Gordon Douglas, has formed the firm of Watson, Hollins & Co. Mr. Rollins purchased a seat on the Stock Exchange a few weeks ago.

JOHN J. GUNTHER'S seat has been poeted for transfer to Clarence C. Chapman, whose sponsors are C. I. Hudson and Walter S. Brewster. Robert B. Potts has sold his seat to John S. Tanner.

H. H. VREELAND, President of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company, is taking a trip through the Northwest.

RUSSELL HARDING, just elected Vice Preeident of the Erie, began his career as a messenger boy when he was very young. He hae been connected with the Portland and Ogdenshurg, the International Great Northern of Texas, the Southern Kansas and Missouri Pacific, the Great Northern, the St. Louis Southwestern, the Missouri Pacific, the Père Marquette, and the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton.

J. PIERPONT MORGAN'S annual trip Westward with President Lanier of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago has invariably been the occasion of all sorts of rumors, and this year's is no exception. It is now said that Chicago Union Traction is the object of Mr. Morgan's attention. Already word comes from Chicago that the financier hae put in his usual denial.

LOSS IN CASH BY BANKS SHOWS LULL IN OCTOBER

Outflow Usually Renewed on Large Scale in November.

RECORD OF PAST FIVE YEARS

Factors Which May Influence Position of Banks This Fall—Funds May Be Retained in Interior Because of Trade Activity.

The fact that for two weeks the banks had besn gaining cash and the practical suspenelon of tranefers of currency to the interior through the Sub-Treasury were taken in some quarters last week ae an indication that the Fall movement of money to the interior had terminated. The turn in monetary movements, it was claimed, ehowed that at an earlier date than usual the demand upon New York for funds for crop moving and similar purposes had come to an end. Against this contention was advanced the argument that the favorabls turn of the currency movement was temporary, being nothing more than a lull in the outward movement, and would be followed by a renewal of the drain on the New York banks.

In view of theee conflicting contentions, it is interesting to examine ths record of recent years in the matter of October cash movemente and the eubsequent fluctuations in the bank returns. The tables below show the cash held by the New York Associated Banks on the first week and last week of October, the changes during that period, and the lose in cash between the close of October and the first week of December:

CASH HOLDINGS—NEW YORK CITY BANKS

	First Week October.	Last Week Ootober.	Decrease.

1900	216,879,700	226,988,400	*10,088,700

*Increase.

It will be seen that in two out of the five years from 1900 to 1904 the banks gained cash during October while in the other years the loss was relatively small. Between the end of October and the beginning of December a gain in cash is shown only once in the five years, while the loesee are at a much more rapid pace than during October. To a very large extent these figures appear to justify the claim that usually in October there is a lull in the outward movement of currency.

This market, of course, at the moment facee the probability of gold exports on a large scale, which may result in large loss in the cash held by the banks, but apart from this the record presented above contains interesting suggestions in regard to what may be expected from the development of normal factors during the coming month.

In a general way the movement in surplus rcserve during the period under consideration corresponds closely to that in cash holdings. The record of the surplus reserve of the banks at the dates corresponding to those named in the table of cash holdings is as follows:

In the fluctuations in the call money rates during these periods there is less regularity than in the cash movements themselvee. This appears from the following figures representing the average rate at the beginning and at the end of October and at the beginning of December:

AVERAGE CALL MONEY RATES.

	First Week. October.	Last Week. October.	First Week. December.
1904	2	2¼	2½
1903	2¾	4	7
1902	14	5	6¼
1901	3½	3¼	4½
1900	2⅝	4½	4½

In considering this year's outlook in this particular matter some general factors that are likely to have important hearing on the future position of the banks ought to be borne in mind. The holding back of cotton in the South has probably postponed to a later date a considerable amount of the financing of the cotton crop which usually calls for large shipments of currency from New York to New Orleans by Treasury transfers and to other Southern points by direct shipment. The transfers to New Orleans, if past experience is repeated this year, will be heavy through November and December.

Another thing to be considered is the probability that this year, owing to the great commercial and industrial activity, funds which have gone West nominally to move the crops will not be returned to New York with the usual dispatch, but will be retained in the interior. Negatively this would have the same effect upon our bank reserves as unusually large shipments during the late months of the year. Such a development, of course, could be regarded in no other light than as proof of the country's prosperity, but Wall Street is proverbially inclined to be a little impatient with prosperity that keeps funds out of the channels where they can be made available for a stock market accommodation.

THE FROSTS AND COTTON.

A Southern View of Early Cold Snaps —Financing Farmers.

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 18.—"Frost upon the lowlands" was the eignificant message sent out from certain points in Northern Mieeissippi and Alabama on the morning of Oct. 12, and repeated from many localities in the cotton belt on the 13th and the 14th. But neither to the small farmer who had so dreaded the meeeage that should foretell added shortage to a crop already pinched by many weather vicissitudes nor to the bull speculator eager to bet on a general crop failure did this fact of a frost prove as important as might have been expected.

All the weather prophets held in veneration at the South, from Prof. Devoe to the cockle bur, had foretold an early killing frost this year, Oct. 17 being the generally understood date. The frost made better time than its early signs preeaged, but came in so mild a form as to fall far ehort of the effect expected.

Oct. 26 is the average date at which frost may be looked for in the Yazoo delta and southward, and in ordinary years its appearance ten days or more before the usual time would be taken to presage a large shortage in the crop. This year, however, I do not perceive any such impreeelon, either among farmers or cotton buyers. Although this froet practically covered the entire cotton belt —a most unsual circumstance—the area touched by it eeemed to be in inverse ratio to its intensity, and, as I heard a farmsr remark yesterday, with a shrug of his shoulders, it had apparently little more effect on the cotton plant than it had upon the market.

It certainly would be an exaggeration to assert that a light frost at this time helps the cotton yield, and yet I know farmers who contend that it does more good than harm. It pinches all late blooms out of existence, a palpable advantage, for October blooms only sap the life of the plant and are better dispensed with. It checks the growth of small bolls also, but only the prolongation of warm weather to a very unusual date would be likely to bring these to maturity. But it also hastens the ripening of the Full-grown bolls, especially by causing a shrivelling of the foliage, which further aids the operation of picking. Cotton, be it remembered, is a perennial plant, which in the tropics, where frost never comes, grows and fruits during the entire year. Here the fruitage continues until the frost checks it, and if this checking is followed, as it usually is, by several weeks of true ripening weather it is very plain that the full-formed bolls reap an advantage from it.

How strong the conviction among those who may be supposed to be the closest students of crop conditions is that this crop will bear no comparison to that of last year in size, is shown by the advertisements now being inserted in Southern newspapers by cotton buyers and factors. These advertise to store in their warehousee any number of bales of cotton, advancing to the owners a loan in every case equal to three-fourths of the value of the cotton at 11 cents a pound, and guarantee to the cotton owners the lowest rate of local charges and the lowest rate of interest. Meanwhile the rate of interest on all mercantile transactions, which has been abnormally high in the South ever since the war, is steadily falling. Money talks, it is said, and in this case its languags is certainly plain. The intense conviction of the Southern farmers that whatever their crop may be, it can bring them only prosperity, unquestionably infects all who talk with them.

DIRECTORS WHO DIRECT.

The Standard Oil Company an Example of the Efficiently Managed Corporation.

The duties of Directors toward the properties with the management of which they are charged are often neglected, as Mr. Scniff said recently, but certain important companies offer a striking exception to the more or less general practice of Directors in leaving everything to executive officers, whose actions the Directore perfunctorily approve. The Standard Oil Company is one of these. Doubtless it owes much of its success to the persistence with which the Directors actually direct its affairs. The board meets every day for a period of two hours, from 11 to 1 o'clock. During this time every detail of the business from the purchase of the crude oil to the sale of the most highly finished product is gone over daily and decisions reached on all points.

These meetings are regularly attended by a majority of the board, which comprises fourteen members. Some of the members, of course, have large interests outside of the Standard Oil Company, and much of their time is devoted to these interests. Among the latter is H. H. Rogers, who, though giving a large part of his time to the Standard Oil Company, gives probably a larger share to his other interests. John D. Archbold is included among the Directors of the Standard Oil who give all their time to that company.

John D. Rockefeller, whose name is intimately connected with the Standard Oil Company, has for the paet four or five years left its management altogether in the hands of his fellow-Directors. On the average during this period he has not been at his office oftener than once in three months. In view of this fact, the popular supposition that John D. Rockefeller personally directs even the minutest affairs of the Oil Trust is wide of the mark.

DATES OF KILLING FROST.

The dates of the appearance of frost in the cotton-growing States vary considerably from year to year. Generally speaking, the first killing frosts do not make their appearance until the second week in November. The earliest date in recent years is Oct. 19. The following table gives the dates on which the first killing frost occurred in each of the principal cotton-growing States for several yeare past:

	Season. 1903-4.	Season. 1902-3.	Season. 1901-2.	Season. 1900-1.
No. Carolina	Oct. 27	Nov. 28	Oct. 19	Nov. 0
So. Carolina	Nov. 28	Nov. 28	Nov. 7	Nov. 10
Georgia	Oct. 25	Nov. 28	Nov. 6	Nov. 9
Florida	Nov. 27	Dec. 27	Nov. 14	Nov. 13
Alabama	Nov. 19	Nov. 28	Nov. 16	Nov. 9
Mississippi	Nov. 19	Nov. 28	Nov. 16	Nov. 9
Louisiana	Nov. 19	Dec. 4	Nov. 16	Nov. 12
Texas	Nov. 18	Dec. 3	Nov. 16	Nov. 12
Arkansas	Nov. 18	Nov. 27	Nov. 16	Nov. 9
Tennessee	Oct. 25	Nov. 27	Nov. 4	Nov. 8

It will be noticed that the first frost in the season of 1903-04 was on Oct. 25. Strangely it made its appearance on that date in Georgia, while some of the more Northern States escaped frost until a month later. The first frost in Texas that season was on Nov. 18, but at Galveston there was no frost until Jan. 26. That place was entirely free from frost the previous year, when the first frost in the Sate of Texas occurred on Dec. 8.

WALL STREET TIPPING

How the Manipulator Plays Upon Speculative Human Nature.

DIFFERENT KINDS OF TIPS

Those That Are Made Good and Those That Go Wrong, and Why They Do Either.

Ask any broker whom you may know what proportion of general stock market speculation is based upon tips, and if he answers you according to his experience he will say, "About 90 per cent."

In its Wall Street usage the word "tip" has a meaning which is foreign to elegant Englieh. The Century defines it in that sense ae follows: "Tip—To give private information to in regard to chances, as in betting or epeculation." Webster's Dictionary does not define it in that meaning at all. The Century dsfinition doee not do the word full justice. A stock market tip is not necessarily private. It may, indeed, be a general tip, one that everybody hears, and in that case it is likely to be a dangerous thing for those who act upon it. Tip, pointer, and hint are interchangeable words lu the Wall Street meaning of each, but tip is the one of the three that is almost exclusively used, probably because of its extreme brevity. It lends itself, moreover, to convenient variations—tipping, tipster, tipped, &c.

The prevalence of profeesional tipping in the stock market of late gives the subject its pertinence. When pools and individual operators are largely in control of the speculative situation, the stock market is likely to present this particular phase. A tip sent out by a pool or a professional operator is an elusive thing. The avidity with which a promising tip is seized upon and circulated, not only throughout the length and breadth of Wall Street, but all over Wall Street's elaborate private wire system, is often amazing. When prices are high ths tips are always to buy stocks, and when prices are low the tips are always to sell. One's common sense, of course, warns one that a Wall Street operator does not tip other people to buy a stock that he is buying himself, or wants to buy; that the tips must come from those who have stocks to sell and are willing to sell them at the prices at which others are advised to buy, but the thing is not so simple as it looks, and this you may know by the fact that professional traders themselves, knowing all about the methods employed, act freely on the tips that are given out by larger operators.

When a pool begins to give out its buying tips it very often makes them good one after another, with a view to increasing interest and confidence. Thus word is sent out that a stock selling, say, at 50 will be put to 55. Few believe it and few will act on the tip, but the stock goes to 55 according to promise. Then those who have had the tip and refused to act on it are sorry, and regret their incredulity. A few days or a few weeks later the tip goes out that the eame stock will be put to 60. Some attention is paid to this, because the other tip was so straight, and a few traders buy. They are probably professional traders, who scent the operation and know that this and several succeeding tips are likely to be made good. The stock goes to 60, and le then tipped for 70. The activity all the while has been increasing. The stock gets to 65, and looks very strong. Those who were tipped originally to buy it at 50, and didn't, berate themselves, saying: "The trouble with us down here is that we get so skeptical that we don't believe anything we hear. We come therefore to a standstill. Look at that stock. We were told to buy it at 50."

There are still five points of the last prediction to be made good. The stock is tipped to sell at 70. Many go in and buy it at 65 who wouldn't touch it at 55. Possibly the pool decides at this stage that the time is ripe for larger operations than were at first contemplated. It really puts the stock to 70, and, those who came in tardily at 65 may take their profits if they chose at the pool's expense. A larger number will buy it higher. The stock is then tipped to sell at par. Those who have been following the tips given out at 50 up have all made money and are willing to come in again, and many more who have not touched the stock up to this point are finally impressed with the merits of it and come in for the first time. In the end the pool has a following on which it can unload its stock at a big profit. If those who buy it at 80, 85, or 90 complain that the stock was not put to par as was promised, they are asked why they did not buy it at 50 when they were first invited. The tip for par, anyway, was not authorized. People had simply got crazy about the stock and run away with the market.

To be a successful manipulater in Wall Street, a man must know his human nature well and appeal to its weaknesses.

When bull tips become very prevalent after the market has had a big advance, and when all the tips that are sent out before the opening of the market each morning are made good in the course of the day with great flourish and noise prudent traders begin to take alarm. Their experience is that after several weeks of this sort of thing, with everybody trading on tips, the pools get out of what they have to sell and suddenly, without any warning, all the tips go wrong. There is always a point at which the progreesive tip will go wrong, and the shrewd player tries to follow it to almost that point and then quit, leaving the growing mob to take what more profit there may be and all the loss. This kind of tipping is most practiced in the case of stocks called "specialties," which are so held as to lend themselves readily to pool manipulation.

In the last two or three months of the bear market of 1903 bear tips were made good day after day just as bull tips are now being made good, or as they have been for a number of weeks past. By the Wall Street code it is a much greater offense to promulgate misleading bear tips than to put out bad bull tips, and the bear operatora of the time referred to had to be very careful in attacking properties with bear tips. They employed tipping bureaus. There was one bureau that predicted declines week after week so accurately as to forecast fluctuations to within 1 per cent. or less. It got a great following by doing this. That was what the bear operators wanted. They made the prices conform to the predictions. Merely for this bureau to predict that a certain stock would decline 5 points was often enough to break it 2 or 3 points, because a mob of traders would rush in and act on the tip by selling it short. In the end the bear tips began suddenly to go wrong. That marked the culmination of the bear market.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Lower—Small Surplus Loss by Banks.

Market Sags Under Pool Selling—Sharp Breaks in Places.

Further consideration of the Hill-Harriman interviews published yesterday and the continued uneasiness abroad over the disordered situation in Russia were mainly responsible for the lower range of prices established at the close of yesterday's short Stock Exchange session. The market opened with some firmness and a number of recently active issues advanced moderately, but before the end of the first hour this movement was reversed, and under the leadership of American Locomotive, which finally fell some two points, the entire list began to give way. The recessions, however, were much more conspicuous in the high-priced issues and the stocks which have been sustained by professional and pool activity than in the standard securities. Delaware and Hudson lost 2⅛ points, American Sugar 1¼ points, and Northern Pacific 1 point, to select instances in the group first named, while Amalgamated Copper, Pressed Steel Car, Sloss-Sheffield, and others in the second group declined a point or more. Metropolitan Steel Railway shares were again under pressure and closed at a loss of 2¼ points. In such stocks as Union Pacific, Pennsylvania, and New York Central the effect of the larger losses elsewhere was found only in their tendency to sag; their declines were inconsiderable. The Harriman prediction of an era of competitive railroad building was again made to do service in the market, and while it does undoubtedly call for serious consideration it is probably being overestimated speculatively. So far as the Russian position is concerned, the cables yesterday reported a cessation of selling in the London market for Continental account, an indication of an easier feeling abroad, which was substantiated in part, at least, by direct reports from Berlin to international houses telling of improvement in the situation. London even bought a moderate amount of stocks.

The statement of the Associated Banks revealed an unlooked-for increase of $4,406,000 in cash. Such a gain was entirely unaccounted for in the known movements of money, for these had indicated an actual loss in cash. An expansion of $15,129,300 in loans followed naturally on the greater market activity at the close of the preceding week, and in the early part of last week. As a result of these changes and the increase of $18,232,900 in deposits attendant largely on the loan expansion, surplus reserves were diminished by only $152,225, leaving that item at $12,430,925, which compares with $16,793,650 in 1904 and $10,274,150 in 1903. The week was one of the favorable periods which usually come in October, a month of lull in the currency movement. In other years it has often been succeeded by renewed demands by the interior, and the transfer of $500,000 to Chicago yesterday suggests the possibility of such a sequence in the present season.

BANK STATEMENT.

Gain in Cash Offsets Large Increase in Loans and Deposits.

Instead of the small loss in cash indicated by Friday's estimates the bank statement yesterday showed a gain of $4,406,000 in cash. Apparently unreported movements of money including the local shifting of funds played even a more important part than usual in the week's cash changes. With the gain in cash, however, there was a large increase in deposits, so that instead of an addition to surplus reserve that item showed a decrease of $152,255. This leaves the banks practically where they were a week ago in the matter of surplus, with the difference that the deposits held are larger now by $18,232,900 than they were the previous week. The increase in loans amounted to $15,129,300.

ON THE LONDON 'CHANGE

Apprehension Over Russian Situation Keeps Prices Down.

Effect on the Continental Bourses Is Feared—Otherwise Good Conditions Prevail in Markets.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES. [Copyright, 1905.]

LONDON, Oct. 28.—The fact that consols have gone below 88 this week is fairly suggestive of the conditions prevailing in the stock markets. Investors and speculators continue to be apprehensive with respect to future developments in the money market, and all classes of securities except British rails have been dull, with a tendency toward low prices.

The greatest degree of apprehension arises from the internal condition of Russia. It is feared that the situation may become so alarming that the Continental Bourses, already more or less nervous about Russian securities, may become panicky. If this should happen the effect on the London money market might be extremely serious.

If this Russian bogy was out of the way it might be said that there had been a certain amount of improvement in monetary conditions. At any rate, the most competent opinion is that the Bank of England will not find it necessary further to advance its rate of interest, and that is a good deal more than could have been said last week.

Nevertheless, the outlook is held not to justify purchases of consols, and dealings in them have been on a very small scale throughout the week, with a tendency to lower quotations all the while. All the other gilt-edged stocks moved in sympathy with consols. Foreign bonds have been moderately firm. Nearly all of them are quoted lower than last Saturday, but with the exception of the Russian issues the losses have been very small.

Americans have been firmer than last week, and the average of the market values is a trifle higher. Transactions in this department, however, have been small in volume, and the price changes in the main have been due to markings up, reflecting New York movements.

British rails have persisted in advancing. The public apparently is convinced that an era of good earnings has set in. The mines have not changed much. The public continues to leave them alone.

LONDON STOCK MARKET.

LONDON, Oct. 28.—Rates for money were easier in the market to-day as the result of large borrowings from the Bank of England, the release of considerable sums by joint stock banks, and reports that French houses are unloading owing to the postponement of the new Russian loan. Discounts were steady.

Operators on the Stock Exchange were gloomy, the tone being chiefly influenced by the Russian troubles and the possible effect on Paris of a continuation of the disturbances.

Although the settlement was concluded without any actual failures, certain difficulties were disclosed and nervousness is felt in consequence. The heaviness was well distributed. The amount of business transacted was not sufficient to withstand the potent influences, including the uncertainty of money, but prices closed steadier.

Consols were dull. Home Rails were inanimate.

Americans opened weak on New York selling, improved, and afterward became moderately steady at parity. Later trading was inactive, and the market closed quiet. United States Steel was the feature. Union Pacific was in some request.

Foreigners suffered from the Russian disturbances. Continentals were dull.

Japanese Imperial 6s of 1904 were quoted at 101¾.

Bullion amounting to £175,000 was withdrawn from the Bank of England to-day for shipment to Egypt.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 28.50; Lisbon, 5.50.

A FINANCIAL OPPORTUNITY
I wonder if I could place before you an opportunity, which is not a gold, silver, copper, or any kind of a mine, not an oil or gas well, not a gambling proposition in stocks, bonds, grain, or provisions, but one dealing with a possibility—greater, safer, and more certain than any of these—would you then be interested sufficiently to send me a postal? Do so—it costs you nothing. Personally, I am financially and morally responsible. I have that which revolutionizes a staple article of industry. I will send all this at my expense. Please let me hear from you. CHARLES E. ELLIS, President, 711 Temple Court, New York City.

MY FREE BOOK is called "How Money Grows," and tells: How to tell a good investment; how to invest small sums; how you can convert $100 into $358.83; how to guard against poor investments, etc., if you are able to save $10 or more a month from your income, you should not fail to own a copy. Not an advertisement of any investment, but full to the brim with information that every one should possess before they invest a dollar. Ask for it on a postal and I'll send it FREE by return mail.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

The market position of Wall Street's professional element is often betrayed by its attitude toward unexpected developments prejudicial to its commitments or toward any assertion of influential opinion inimical to the immediate trend of speculative activity. When a majority of professional operators are bullish news of bearish portent is disregarded if possible, and if it is too important or interesting to be put aside it is interpreted for the best. Frequently the same crowd that has despised an opinion contrary to its mood will, in a later mood, adopt that identical opinion as its own and act upon it. The hostile reception of Mr. Harriman's interview is pretty conclusive proof that the state of professional sentiment at present is bullish, and also that a majority of active speculators are long of stocks. Otherwise they would not denounce him so warmly, heap aspersions upon him, and charge him with having given out the interview solely for the purpose of destroying confidence in the market. Immediately after the interview appeared on Friday afternoon speculative interests committed to the bull side of the market began to impugn Mr. Harriman's motives, and even to demand that the relation which they alleged to exist between his utterances and his position on the market be shown up.

"I was at the Waldorf last night," said a broker downtown yesterday, "and I was surprised at the unanimity with which traders denounced the Harriman interview, taking the position at the same time that nothing that he might say would matter at all, because the bull crowd had become too strong to be intimidated. Every man expressing this opinion was, of course, long of the market. That goes without saying. One man said to me: 'So Harriman is on top of the market, eh? It looks that way, at least, and he will be whipped if he is.' Another said, angrily: 'That interview is bullish on Union Pacific. Doesn't Harriman say himself that Union Pacific is in the strongest position?' I said to this man: 'If you think it's bullish on Union Pacific and you are long of the stock, what are you denouncing?' He didn't answer that."

Nothing since the Vanderlip speech has moved the bull enthusiasts to so loud a defense of their position on the market. It will be remembered that Mr. Vanderlip's reference to the danger of starting a bull speculation from this level of prices threw the bull crowd into temporary confusion. The effect at first produced by his utterances was finally reasoned out of mind. Within a week people referred to the speech and said that Mr. Vanderlip positively was forced to say something conservative, or his glowing account of prosperity would have inflamed the public's speculative imagination to a dangerous degree. Similarly the Russian situation has been disregarded altogether or greatly minimized in its bearing upon this market. The famous query once propounded in the United States Senate, "What have we to do with abroad?" fits the case exactly. Bullish traders to whose attention the state of Russian affairs was called on Saturday, merely asked: "What has that to do with our prosperity?" With Wall Street in another mood, all of these things would be depressing. When the professional contingent is bearish and short of the market, unfavorable influences are unduly emphasized and bullish influences minimized, just as the reverse is true when the prevailing sentiment is bullish.

When powerful stock market interests set out to do a certain thing they often begin by playing a hand that nobody understands.

The market was weak from beginning to end of yesterday's short Stock Exchange session, with continuous selling pressure on the general list. After the publication of the week's banking results prices dipped sharply, and then in the last half hour a moderate recovery from the lowest quotations was brought about through short covering. Two stocks upon which a great deal of speculative interest has recently converged—Union Pacific and United States Steel common—declined to the respective price levels on which of late they have been stoutly supported. On Thursday of the week before last the general market was subjected to heavy selling pressure, and Steel common, which was sold perhaps more heavily than any other stocks, was taken in large quantities at 37. There was very heavy trading on that price, and it was said afterward that brokers handling the supporting orders had been instructed not to let the stock sell below 37. At all events, it did not sell at 36⅞. It has since sold at 39¼. Yesterday it touched 37 again, and was supported there as before. A feature of the support recently given to this stock is that it has been most pronounced when most needed. The stock has been a laggard in strong markets, showing the effects of continuous liquidation, but in weak markets it has shown more than average resistance to selling pressure. Union Pacific on more than one occasion of late has been heavily bought on the level of 131. On the same break that carried Steel common down to 37, Union Pacific declined to 130⅞. It has sold since then as high as 135¼. It sold yesterday at 131⅛, but recovered to 131¾, where it closed. Steel common closed at 37⅛.

It was doubtless a mere coincidence that American Locomotive common broke 2½ points yesterday immediately following the announcement, made in a somewhat unusual manner, that Joseph H. Hoadley was no longer interested in any pool operations either in that stock or International Power.

The acute weakness of Metropolitan Street Railway, which declined more than two points further yesterday, and a decline also in Consolidated Gas, both incidents being referable, as many believe, to the prominence of the municipal ownership issue in the local campaign, at length affected the position of Brooklyn Rapid Transit. The bull campaign, at least, has been checked. From the weakness of the stock in the last two or three days it might be inferred that the bull crowd had succeeded in distributing its line. From the highest price of the week there was a reaction of 4 points. There has been a series of movements in the market recently for which the controlling interests were not directly responsible, and that in Brooklyn was one of them. The crowd which has hitherto controlled the market for the stock appeared to have little or nothing to do with the manipulation. The advance, however, was not seriously opposed, and it is possible that there was an "understanding" about it. The Flower crowd sold calls on the stock below 75, and the price was carried above 78. The speculative position of the stock is now uncertain.

The decline in Metropolitan Street Railway has been too severe to be accounted for wholly by the aspects of the municipal campaign. There must be other reasons for it. The support has been very indifferent. The controlling interests apparently have been willing that the stock should decline. It is noteworthy that the pressure is confined largely to Metropolitan Street Railway stock, being much less pronounced in the kindred issue, Metropolitan Securities. It is through the Metropolitan Securities Company that 7 per cent. is guaranteed on Metropolitan Street Railway stock. The quotation for Metropolitan Securities is likely to mislead those who have never traded in the stock. Only $50 a share has been paid on it, and the par value is $100 a share. From the price at which the stock is quoted the amount unpaid ($50) is deducted. Thus the purchaser buys Metropolitan Securities at 77 and pays 27 for it. On this basis the stock would have to sell at par to represent what has actually been paid in. The purchaser at par would pay 50 for the stock, the other 50 being deducted. On the same basis the stock cannot be quoted below 50. Deduct 50 from 50, and nothing remains.

Two weeks ago it was said by the bull crowd in Canadian Pacific that there was a short interest of 50,000 shares which could not survive the next fortnightly settlement in London. The settlement was last week, and the bull account, if anything, proved to be more unwieldy than the bear account. One expedient for bulling Canadian Pacific has been to buy calls on it in London. Followers of the movement have been urged to buy calls in preference to increasing their actual long interest in the stock. The result of this heavy buying of calls has been to force buying of the stock itself by the London option dealers, who hedge by buying against their calls and selling against their puts.

SEABOARD AIR LINE REPORT.

President Barr Says Heavy Expenditures Must Go on for Years.

The Seaboard Air Line Railway's report for the year ended June 30, which was attacked by John Skelton Williams at the recent Directors' meeting, shows a surplus of $1,171,909, an increase of $789,084 over the surplus for the previous year. The results of operation compare as follows with those of 1904:

	1905.	1904.
Gross earnings	$14,201,943	$13,311,409
Op. expenses and taxes	10,082,745	10,133,813
Net earnings	$4,119,194	$3,177,596
Other income	58,190	56,352
Total income	$4,177,384	$3,233,948
Interest and rentals	$2,954,066	$2,732,374
Other deductions	51,409	118,749
Total charges	$3,005,475	$2,851,123
Surplus	$1,171,909	$382,825

The Atlanta and Birmingham Air Line Railway, which was opened to traffic, shows for the period from Dec. 1 to June 30 a deficit of $93,271. The line, however, was not fully open during this period.

Regarding the need of further improvements, President J. M. Barr says in his statement to the stockholders:

The conditions are very prosperous and the territory is rapidly developing. Heavy expenditures for rail renewals and replacement of equipment must continue for several years to come. Besides, large capital expenditures must be made to provide the necessary facilities for economical operation and to maintain satisfactory service.

The capital expenditures for improvements and betterments amounted to $481,584, and a new car trust to the amount of $500,000 was executed during the year.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Oct. 28.—The money market is somewhat uncertain. There is more disposition to await developments before increasing to any extent the output of funds.

Call loans, 5@5½ per cent.; time loans, collateral, 4½@5 per cent.; time loans, mercantile paper, 4½@5 per cent. Clearing House loans, 5 per cent.; New York funds, 10c discount at par. Clearings, $24,604,329; balances, $1,691,800; Sub-Treasury debit, $39,442.

For the week: Clearings, $150,939,894; balances, $10,165,286.

The stock market to-day was fairly active, and prices were weak in sympathy with those in New York. Boston Consolidated was almost the only stock on the board which stood up, although Isle Royale was strong part of the time. Copper Range, North Butte, Woolen, and most of the usual market leaders had substantial losses. Complete transactions follow:

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 28.—Interest to-day centres upon the bond list. There was a good demand for both investment and speculative issues. Some losses were sustained, while other securities gained strength.

An advance of 1¾ points in the income bonds of the Maryland and Pennsylvania Railroad was variously attributed to a speculative move in this issue, to the increased earnings, and to the revival of the talk of a deal for the property.

The activity in Norfolk Railway and Light Company's 5 per cent. bonds recently is attributed to the showing made by the company. In the railway group Sparrow's Point 4½s were ¼ higher, United Railways 4s advanced fractionally, Union Railway free incomes sold down ½, and United pooled incomes dropped 1 point.

Western Maryland eased off to 15, later rising to 15½. Seaboard new common held steady on the early trading, suddenly dropping ½ point. Northern Central showed weakness. Alabama Coal and Iron common declined 9 points.

The close was fairly active and steady. Sales: Shares, $1,532; bonds, $80,000. The list:

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 28.—Weakness was continued in this market to-day. An effort was made to rally prices by advancing Lehigh Valley, but seeing it was without effect the stock was allowed to slip back to 82¼, at which price it was offered at the close.

Lehigh Navigation trust certificates declined a point, to 111¾, but it was offered at 112 at the close. After the close a sensation was sprung on the Street by a sale of Lehigh Navigation at 113, while 82¼ was strongly bid for Lehigh Valley. Rumors of a deal were circulated, but they could not be confirmed.

In the remainder of the market prices held fairly well. Total sales, 25,011 shares.

Financial Notes.

Hermann Sielcken has been made Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Kansas City Southern Railway. He succeeds H. R. Duval.

The right of stockholders to subscribe to the new stock of the New York and New Jersey Telephone Company will expire on Nov. 30, 1905. Payments to be made as follows: 25 per cent. Dec. 1, 1905; 25 per cent. April 1, 1906; 25 per cent. July 1, 1906, and 25 per cent. Oct. 1, 1906.

The Portland Railway Company has been organized under the laws of Oregon as successor to the Portland Consolidated Railway. The capital of the new company consists of $4,000,000 common and $3,000,000 5 per cent. preferred stock. An issue of refunding 5 per cent. bonds has been authorized.

The Directors of the Alabama, New Orleans, Texas and Pacific Junction Railways, Limited, have advised stockholders not to reduce the capital stock in order to hasten a distribution of dividends. The board recommends that the stockholders wait until the deficit of $111,427 is wiped out by the accumulation of surplus earnings.

NOTES OF INSURANCE INTERESTS

In view of the depletion of the insurance fund of the Illinois Central Railroad because of its fire loss on the New Orleans terminals, a special appropriation of $500,000 from ordinary income has been added to the fund, which on June 30 amounted to $2,152,919.

The General Accident Assurance Corporation of Scotland has been licensed to transact a general liability insurance business in the States of Louisiana and Florida.

J. B. Tallman has resigned as special agent of the Atlas Assurance Company of London for Michigan, northern Indiana and Northern Illinois.

The Metropolitan Fire Insurance Company is planning to apply for admission to New York and Pennsylvania.

The Insurance Press is authority for the statement that a general revision of the insurance laws of Iowa is slated for the next meeting of the Legislature. A standard fire policy will probably be adopted, based upon the form now used by the Iowa State companies, which promise a six-year term.

M. S. Tremaine of the lumber firm of Montgomery Brothers of Buffalo has been chosen first President of the $200,000 fire insurance company which is being formed in that city because of the lack of sufficient capital on the part of lumber insurance companies to write the amount of insurance demanded.

The Committee of Twenty of the National Board of Fire Underwriters reports that the conflagration hazard of San Francisco is extremely serious, and goes on to say: "Not only is the hazard extreme within the congested value district, but it is augmented by the presence of a complete surrounding, great height, large area frame residence district, itself unmanageable from a fire-fighting standpoint by reason of adverse conditions introduced by the topography. In fact, San Francisco has violated all underwriting traditions and precedent by not burning up. That it has not done so is largely due to the vigilance of the Fire Department, which cannot be relied upon indefinitely to stave off the inevitable."

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

It is so long since Riverside Drive has produced any developments of real importance that the deal for the block front between Eighty-fifth and Eighty-sixth Streets, reported in more detail in another column, is likely to command more wide-spread attention than any other transaction of recent date. The property has been bought by the City Investing Company, part of it has already been resold, and probably within another year the improvement of all of it will be undertaken.

The surprising degree of success which attended the Aldrich estate auction sale on Wednesday has been a matter of very general satisfaction to the entire market. That buyers were found for $5,000,000 worth of property included in single offerings speaks volumes for the strength of the existing real estate situation, particularly in view of the fact that very many of the parcels were of a value beyond the reach of small operators and were of investment rather than speculative character.

The sale served to demonstrate that, if an owner does not expect to realize an exorbitant sum, property of high value is not such an inconvertible asset as has been generally supposed. An interesting comparison is afforded by the total proceeds of this auction offering of Manhattan properties, $4,832,500, and their total assessed valuation $4,477,000—the latter amount being about 92 per cent. of the former.

Despite the absorbing interest of this event in the salesroom, the week's business at private sale has not been without its full share of interesting features. Downtown the resale of the corner of Liberty and Temple Streets and the deal for the small block front on Broad Street, between Beaver and Marketfield Streets, are likely to lead to building operations, while speculative purchases on Greenwich and West Streets have indicated a continuance of the demand for small parcels in the territory west of Broadway and south of Cortlandt Street.

Washington Heights is apparently entering upon a period of somewhat increased speculative activity. Within the week one operation has taken over nearly forty lots on Broadway between 135th and 155th Streets, and numerous smaller transactions have swelled the total volume of business in that section to fairly creditable proportions. On Morningside Heights, new building operations were projected at Amsterdam Avenue, 111th and 112th Streets, and on 115th Street just west of Broadway.

Upper east side activity is apparently in no immediate danger of a decline. The market for new tenements is seemingly just as vigorous as ever, and that the block bounded by Park and Lexington Avenues, 130th and 131st Streets should have changed hands three times within five days is perhaps sufficient evidence that speculators do not lack confidence in the situation.

E. A. Turner has sold for Mrs. Bartholomew Ward the five-story dwelling 34 West Twenty-eighth Street, on lot 27.6 by 100, between Broadway and Sixth Avenue. The buyer, Harry L. Toplitz, will erect on the site a six-story store and office building. The property has not changed hands since 1858.

The Manhattan Avenue lots will be improved by their new owners.

The Northwestern Realty Company has bought from Henry Raabe, Jr., seven lots on the north side of 140th Street, between Lenox and Seventh Avenues.

Woolen Commission Men Moving.

Leases which have been made in the new Knickerbocker Building, at Fifth Avenue and Sixteenth Street, reveal an interesting case of the northward movement of business, many of the prospective tenants being woolen commission houses, now in the Worth Street neighborhood. Among the firms who have taken space in the Knickerbocker Building through the agents, Albert B. Ashforth and Anthony Lo Forte, are Mackintosh, Taft & McKenney, Strong, Hewat & Co., Hoffmann & Busse, Theodore Howard, Earnscliffe Woolen Company, Dalton Woolen Company, Thomas Ould, James & E. H. THE AUCTION ROOM.

The schedule for this week in the salesroom presents an unusually large variety of both improved and vacant properties in Manhattan.

Auctioneer Kennelly will sell on Tuesday the large plot at the southeast corner of Riverside Drive and Seventy-third Street, opposite the Schwab mansion, and an additional lot on Riverside Drive, about 140 feet south of Seventy-third Street. He will also offer west side dwellings at 12 West Seventy-sixth Street and 139 West Eighty-sixth Street; the property 134 West Thirty-sixth Street, just west of Broadway; a corner at Tenth Avenue and Twenty-eighth Street, and 58 Grove Street. On the same day the six-story building, 8 Lispenard Street, will be put up at the stand of James L. Wells.

Wednesday's list includes the tenement at the northwest corner of First Avenue and Forty-third Street, the dwelling 119 West Ninety-seventh Street, and the two vacant blocks in the Bronx bounded by Trinity Avenue, Terrace Place, and Pontiac Place.

Properties in the Pennsylvania section, at 145 and 147 West Thirtieth Street, will be sold on Thursday by Parish, Fisher, Mooney & Co. Auctioneer Day will offer on the same day ten lots on the Southern Boulevard and Bryant Avenue.

For to-morrow, the only announcement covers eighteen lots on the west side of Jerome Avenue, between 176th and 177th Streets, to be sold by R. E. Simon of L. J. Phillips & Co. With the formal approval of the Jerome Avenue Subway route, there has been a marked revival of interest in those neighborhoods to be benefited by it. The lots directly opposite those to be sold to-morrow are now being improved with flats and stores.

MORTGAGE FILINGS FOR WEEK.

There were recorded last week 356 mortgages for $3,315,618, of which 149, for $1,151,170, were at 6 per cent.; 74 for $753,559, at 5½ per cent.; 78, for $712,300, at 5 per cent.; 6, for $87,500, at 4½ per cent., and 1, for $3,000, at 4 per cent. In the corresponding week last year there were recorded 345 mortgages for $7,387,212, of which 154, for $2,784,713, were at 6 per cent.; 1, for $2,200, was at 5½ per cent.; 107, for $939,485, at 5 per cent.; 36, for $3,015,000, at 4½ per cent., and 9, for $134,550, at 4 per cent.

IMPORTANT BRONX OFFERING.

Remainder of Varian Property Near Bedford Park to be Sold This Week.

The remainder of the Varian estate property, between Bronx and Van Cortlandt Parks, a part of which provided on Oct. 3 one of the most successful lot sales of the Fall season, will be offered at auction on Tuesday at the Real Estate Salesroom, 14 and 16 Vesey Street, by R. E. Simon of L. J. Phillips & Co. That portion of the property covered by the previous sale included 181 lots, the offering consisting of only 134 lots.

The property is situated on Mosholu Parkway North, Steuben, Wayne, and Tryon Avenues, Woodlawn Road, Reservoir Oval, and 207th, 208th, and 210th Streets. Mosholu Parkway is 600 feet in width, connecting Van Cortlandt and Bronx Parks, and also running from Webster Avenue on the east to Jerome Avenue on the west. Both of these avenues now have trolley roads. Steuben Avenue, 100 feet wide, running north and south, makes all of the Varian property tributary to Gun Hill Road, which is the only crosstown thoroughfare in that entire section, and which, by reason of this fact, is destined to assume steadily a greater degree of importance. Woodlawn Road is 80 feet wide, and connects Webster Avenue with Gun Hill Road and Jerome Avenue.

In point of accessibility lots in this neighborhood already have much to recommend them, but with still greater advantages to be derived from transit improvements already assured. To-day the whole elevated system is in close touch with the property through the Bronx Park station of the Third Avenue line. The Bronx Park and William's Bridge stations of the New York Central's Harlem division are within a few blocks, and, with the operation of this road by electricity, it is believed that the time to the heart of Manhattan will be less than twenty minutes. The Jerome Avenue subway, already approved by the Rapid Transit Commission, and for which the necessary consents of property owners have been secured, will land its passengers within two blocks of this property. New trolley lines are to be built on Gun Hill Road, Decatur Avenue, and 200th Street, the plans for the last-mentioned route providing for connection with the Washington Heights Subway by way of Washington Bridge.

The territory between Bronx and Van Cortlandt Parks is generally regarded, from a residential point of view, as one of the most attractive anywhere in the Bronx. The ground lies high, having an elevation of 190 feet above tidewater. Along the line of Jerome Avenue are Fordham Heights and University Heights, both of which have been built up extensively with fine dwellings—a circumstance which is taken to mean that the entire westerly part of the Bronx will follow the lead of the corresponding part of Manhattan in becoming a residential section of the highest character. Its proximity to two of the city's largest and finest parks is likely to make the William's Bridge district one of peculiar attractions for residential purposes, while it is lacking in none of the so-called public improvements. A fine public school is within two minutes' walk of the Varian property.

At the previous auction sale 181 lots were divided up among sixty buyers, indicating that the offering was one which appealed primarily to homeseekers and small investors. Lots on Woodlawn Road, Rochambeau Avenue, and Van Cortlandt Avenue sold at from $1,000 to $1,700 each—some corners at $3,500—but at an average of $1,300 a lot. Under the terms of sale for Tuesday's offering 65 per cent. of the purchase price may remain on mortgage for one, two, or three years, at 5 per cent. interest.

BIG DEAL ON LONG ISLAND.

Dean Alvord Acquires 3,000-Acre Tract at Shinnecock Hills.

Cuyler, Morgan & Co., acting as trustees for the English company owning the Shinnecock Hills, signed contracts yesterday with Dean Alvord, by which the latter becomes the owner of that famous Long Island property. The tract lies between Peconic Bay on the north and Shinnecock Bay on the south, and extends from Canoe Place Creek to Southampton, consisting of over 3,000 acres—2,600 acres of upland and 500 acres of land under water—with nearly fifteen miles of water front. The Long Island Railroad has two stations on the property.

This land was originally acquired from the Shinnecock Indians by a syndicate of English capitalists, who sold it about fifteen years ago to an American company, consisting of John Claflin, Gen. Wager Swayne, James C. Parrish, Charles L. Atterbury, F. K. Pendleton, and others, who built Summer homes there. The greater part of the property has never been developed.

Recently, however, the English company again took over all the property not actually occupied by the individuals composing the American company.

James C. Farnsworth of the office of Dean Alvord conducted the negotiations for the buyer, and T. Mallinson of London represented the English company. By this and previous purchases on the north and south shores, Dean Alvord becomes the owner of over twenty-five miles of shore front, or over one-tenth of the entire coast line of Long Island.

IMPORTANCE OF PURCHASE BY STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Hamburg-American the First Transatlantic Line to Invest in New York Real Estate.—New Possibilities Suggested by the Deal for Aldrich Court.

The purchase of Aldrich Court by the Hamburg-American Packet Company for $1,200,000, besides ranking as one of the largest auction transactions of recent years, possessed other features scarcely less interesting.

Considered in relation to the whole downtown real estate situation, the deal was one of no slight significance, in that the Hamburg-American will be the first of the great transatlantic lines to own its own building in this city. It is a prediction frequently heard that at no very distant date all of the properties in the financial district and tributary to it will be in the hands of great corporations. Not many years ago the buildings of the great insurance companies and a few of the more prominent financial institutions marked practically the only cases of corporate ownership in that entire section. Steadily, however, as one class of corporations after another became impressed with the advisability, not to say necessity, of owning their own buildings, the holdings of individuals and estates have been reduced.

The importance of having quarters of assured permanence has impressed itself more firmly upon the heads of these corporations, as the supply of property has become more and more restricted. The banks and trust companies naturally have been the leaders in this movement, but within the last five years several of the private banking houses have virtually been compelled to provide their own homes. There is to-day a positive dearth of first-class banking space in the financial district. One prominent agent said only a few days ago that he was being hindered in "placing" a large concern, not by any question of rental, but simply by the fact that a banking room of the sort he is looking for is not to be had at any price.

Purchases within the last two years by the United States and American Express Companies point in the same direction, and now a steamship company has reached a decision that the own-your-own-home doctrine is applicable to the big corporation as well as to the suburban resident. Transatlantic business gives no promise of a decline, and it will be interesting to see whether some of the other steamship companies do not come to the conclusion that a million or so in New York real estate is just as good a business proposition as three or four times that sum in a new ocean greyhound.

The bulk of real estate opinion seems to be that in Aldrich Court at $1,200,000 the Hamburg-American Company secured a bargain. The building itself is far from valueless, but even figuring the auction price solely as a ground value, it does not appear to have been excessive. The plot contains over 15,000 square feet, making the price at the rate of $80 a square foot. The location is undoubtedly inferior to the American Express Company's site at 63 and 65 Broadway, said to have been bought at $140 a square foot, but not to any such extent as the difference between these two figures would indicate. The lot at 51 Broadway, running through to Trinity Place, on which stands the new building of Wells, Fargo & Co., was leased to that corporation in 1902 for twenty-one years at an annual rental of $12,000. Capitalized on a 5 per cent. basis, this rental would give a ground value of $240,000, or about $50 a square foot.

South of Morris Street William H. Mairs paid an average of about $65 a square foot for the properties adjoining the old Stevens House. He bought 13 Broadway, 35.9 by 101, for $200,000, and for 15 Broadway, 27 by 118, he paid $209,500.

The Hamburg-American Company's purchase is likely to have considerable effect in fixing the character of the west side of Broadway, south of Rector Street. Below that point, except in the case of the Empire Building, the financial district has shown no disposition to cross Broadway, and the ownership of one large property by so important a corporation should have a decided influence in bringing about a further centralization of steamship and transportation interests in the neighborhood.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

G. L. SCHUYLER & CO., INCORPORATED.—Judge Holt of the United States District Court has refused to appoint a receiver in bankruptcy for the assets of G. L. Schuyler & Co., Incorporated, lumber dealers at Ninety-eighth Street and East River, against which concern two petitions in bankruptcy were filed on Friday, and Emanuel Blumenstiel, the receiver appointed by Judge Stover of the Supreme Court, continues in possession of the assets. Application for the bankruptcy receiver was made on the second petition and was opposed by Mr. Blumenstiel.

WILLIAM JACOBUS.—The case of William Jacobus, formerly a wholesale dealer in metals and junk at 250 Water Street, against whom a creditors' petition in bankruptcy was filed on Sept. 8, 1904, has been closed by John J. Townsend, referee in bankruptcy, without a discharge to Mr. Jacobus, as he failed to file an application for his discharge within a year from the date of his adjudication. Mr. Jacobus claimed that one of the reasons for the bankruptcy was losses on the races amounting to $20,000. His liabilities were $62,272 and assets $430.

THE COMMERCIAL WORLD

GRAIN.—WHEAT—The wheat market on Saturday was active and irregular, but at the same time developed a strong undertone, which resulted in prices attaining new high levels for the season. At the regular close in New York they showed ⅞c to 1⅜c net advance. Throughout the next hour they remained under bull control, with the exception of a few brief reactions, and at 1 o'clock December was quoted 97⅜c and May 95⅝c. One of the most important influences affecting the market was a private cable declaring that the Odessa Bourse had announced emergency cancelations, which meant that merchants were entitled to default on their grain contracts owing to the revolutionary conditions existing. It started the buying movement afresh in all American markets, and quite overcame the effect of Friday's selling movement, when the Chicago bull leader was understood to have marketed part of his holdings. Although this was denied, professionals remained suspicious, and there was more or less selling off and on during the forenoon until the Russian news reestablished bull confidence. Foreign markets themselves were very irregular. Berlin lost 2¼@3 marks and Paris 10@20 points; on the other hand Budapest was up 21 points, and Liverpool closed partly ¼d net higher. There was further unfavorable Argentine news to help the market, although many thought the damage reports from there had been exaggerated. Western weather was clear and cold, and the primary movement just about equalled that of last year. Seaboard clearances of flour were fairly liberal, with further good sales reported at the West. No. 2 red here closed at 96¾c, elevator, and 98¼c, free on board, afloat; No. 1 Northern Duluth, $1⅛; No. 1 Northern Manitoba, 99¼c, free on board, afloat. Export sales for the week were estimated at 100 loads.

CORN.—The local corn market was easy and closed ¼@⅜c net lower. At Chicago near months were depressed by prospects for heavier receipts next week, as farm offerings have increased, but late positions reflected the strength in wheat, May going to a premium over December. The interior receipts were about 60,000 bushels larger than a year ago, and cables closed ¼@⅜d net lower. The leading bull at Chicago was a buyer of corn, and commission houses bought May on the soft spots, but were sellers of December. No export sales were reported, although for the week it was estimated 140 loads had been taken. No. 2 corn closed 62½c, elevator, and 62½c, free on board, afloat; other grades nominal.

COTTON.—The cotton market was only moderately active, sales for the half session being about 125,000 bales, according to estimates. Prices were somewhat irregular early, but yielded to realizing and closed at about the low point of the day and barely steady at a net decline of from 5 to 11 points.

The opening was easy at a decline of from 4 to 7 points, in response to easier cables than expected and the favorable early weather map. The forecast, however, called for rather lower temperatures over Sunday, and after the first few minutes the market rallied to practically the closing figures of Friday on covering of shorts. Around the 10.60 for January yesterday's buyers began taking profits, and the market again eased off and ruled generally easy during the late trading. The early advance may have been promoted to some extent by a rumor that a prominent Liverpool crop expert now in the belt would issue a bullish estimate of the crop on Monday, but this report seemed to have no foundation aside from the fact that the gentleman in question usually issues such an estimate on his return to New York from the South, and that some recent cables from Liverpool have apparently given the impression that the advices received there from the crop expert were of a bullish character. The late decline may have been aided to some extent by reports of freer spot offerings in the South, although these also were vague in character and seemed chiefly due to the fact that Liverpool attributed the lack of a greater response in that market to the advance here of Friday to freer spot offerings. The English market was 3 points higher at the close and spot cotton was 2 points higher on sales of 8,000 bales. Spot sales in Liverpool have been heavy for the week, but stocks there show a considerable increase, and the Russian news is considered an unfavorable feature of the foreign situation.

The range of contract prices in the local market was as follows:

	High.	Low.	Close.	Friday's Close.
October	10.35	10.30	10.25@10.27	10.30

COFFEE.—The coffee market was quiet, but after some early irregularity ruled generally steady in the absence of near-by liquidation. The opening was unchanged to 5 points lower in sympathy with disappointing French cables. The market closed dull unchanged to 5 points higher. Sales were reported of about 14,250 bags, including switches of 5,000 bags. Havre was ¼f. lower, which, in view of the steadiness in the local market of the previous day was considered an unfavorable showing. Hamburg advanced a partial ¼ pfennig, but the situation in primary markets was not considered encouraging, for while prices were unchanged at both Rio and Santos, Rio was reported weak. Receipts also compared bearishly with last year's figures, the two ports getting 69,000 bags against 51,000 last year. Jundiahy receipts were 40,000 bags against 23,000 last year.

The market for spot coffee was quiet, with quotations on the basis of 8⅝c for Rio No. 7. Contract prices ranged as follows:

	High.	Low.	Close.	Friday's Close.
October	..	..	6.60@6.65	6.55

METALS.—The market for regular pig-iron certificates was moderately active, with prices partly higher. Foundry grades were more active at higher prices. Sales: 600 tons February regulars at $16.60, 200 tons February regulars at $16.70, 200 tons December foundry at $16.50, 200 tons February at $16.65, and 100 tons February foundry at $16.70.

In warrants there were sales of 500 tons basic Alliquippa, at $16.45, and 100 tons December No. 2 foundry, at $13.50. Regulars are quoted as follows: Cash, $16.10; October, $16.10@$16.50; November, $16.25@$16.75; December, $16.35@$16.65; January, $16.25@$16.[illegible]; February, $16.40 bid, and March $16.50 bid.

This property fulfills in every detail the measure by which close-in suburban property was judged by the founders of the greatest real estate fortunes of New York City.

On October 3 181 lots of the Varian Estate property were offered at auction. Sixty men and women of foresight purchased all of this property.

So many have been the inquiries since then for property in this vicinity that the owners have consented to an offer of the remainder of the estate—134 lots in all. The lots sold, as well as those to be sold, are restricted, assuring the high-class residential character of the neighborhood. Buildings are already in the course of construction on the property on Woodlawn Road.

Within the Reach of the Small Capitalist as well as the Rich Investor, Builder and Speculator.

At the October 3d sale, lots on Woodlawn Road, Rochambeau Avenue and Van Cortlandt Avenue sold at from $1,000 to $1,700—some corners up to $3,500—an average of $1,300 each. Four hundred and fifty-five dollars in cash was all that was needed to become the owner of one of the lots, at the average price of $1 300, the balance, $845, being left on mortgage. Sixty dollars a year is all that it costs to pay the interest and taxes on a lot at that price, upon these terms.

At the end of five years this $1,300 lot would have cost its owner not more than $1,600.

The $455 thus invested, if left in a savings bank, would show a profit of only $86.07.

This editorial comment of the Evening Journal, October 25, refers to the above-mentioned sale:

"This we say with the utmost confidence and certainty. Sooner or later every inch of land sold at that sale will be covered with houses as thickly as Broadway is now at Twenty-third Street.

"Every inch of that ground, sooner or later, will be worth as much as a foot of the ground was at that auction sale. And twenty years from now, or ten years from now, there will be somebody saying: 'I happened to see an advertisement in a newspaper and I bought a lot for $1,500 that I have just sold for $15,000.'

"Don't imagine that this is a dream—it has happened over and over and over in New York City, and it will happen over and over again."

Great oaks from little acorns grow. Small sums wisely invested have been the foundations of large fortunes.

This property will be nearer the City Hall than 125th Street was a few years ago. Lots in Harlem which were then selling for $5,000 each are to-day sought for at $15,000 or more.

Learn to let the money you have worked for--work for you.

Consider: The growth and development of the city.
Consider: The transit facilities, and those approved and about to be built.
Consider: That Mosholu Parkway is 600 feet wide.
Consider: That it connects Van Cortlandt and Bronx Parks.
Consider: That these lots lie midway between these Parks.
Consider: That some of them face Mosholu Parkway itself.
Consider: That one of the best Public Schools is directly opposite.

Look at the property—judge for yourself—and don't forget the date and place of the sale—Tuesday next, October 31, at 12:15, at the Exchange Salesroom, 14-16 Vesey Street, New York.

Where You Can Live Economically

ON the north shore of Long Island Sound we built up a MODERN SUBURB, with well-paved streets and sidewalks, with water supply, gas, electricity and all other up-to-date city conveniences.

The property slopes down to Little Neck Bay, on whose shore stands the Bayside Yacht Club, affording the residents every facility for yachting, boating, fishing, and other aquatic sports.

The views from the terraces of are enchanting. Facing the north, you look down a beautiful slope to the wide sweep of Little Neck Bay, on whose shores the magnificent country seats of many wealthy New York families are located.

There are 15 beautiful villas in Bayside Park occupied by New York business and professional men. A score of new houses are now being added, which we offer for sale with large plots of ground and water front privileges at prices ranging from $5,500 to $8,500.

By paying 10 per cent. of their price, the balance in small monthly instalments, you can become the owner.

If you prefer to build your own house, we will advance you the money and sell you lots for $250 and upward.

A year from now the $250 Lots will cost $350.

When the Pennsylvania R. R. Tunnel is completed, electrically propelled trains will take you to Bayside in about 10 minutes from Herald Square.

Do you realize what this means for property values at this resort?

Go see the place. We'll pay your fare if you will call at our office. A booklet sent on request.

JEROME TO GET HUGHES AS SPECIAL PROSECUTOR

And Himself Assist in Punishing Insurance Grafters.

REPLY TO OSBORNE'S LATEST

The Tammany Candidate's Own Indorsement of the Jerome Nominators Quoted Against Himself.

District Attorney Jerome's answer to the charge of James W. Osborne that men prominently connected with the large insurance companies were among his nominators and active supporters of his candidature is that, if re-elected, he will ask the Board of Estimate for an appropriation enabling him to retain Charles E. Hughes as special counsel, and, having turned the routine of his office over to his chief of staff, Mr. Rand, will join Mr. Hughes in such a probing of the insurance scandal as will result in the prosecution of every person concerned who can be brought within reach of the criminal law. Mr. Jerome said last night:

"My urbane and learned friend changes his ground of attack on me so frequently that it is difficult to keep abreast of his line of reasoning. We are having a three weeks' campaign. In the first week of the campaign I was, in his opinion, 'wholly inefficient.' He cited specific instances, the only effect of which was to display his ignorance of the law and the facts. Finding that bubble was pricked, he began the second week of the campaign with the charge that I was a fool, contained in his graphic and now famous moral statement 'that if he [Jerome] is not getting it for himself, he must be a fool.'

"He now begins the third week of the campaign with a labored discourse, in which he would prove to the people of this city that I am a knave. It is not possible to reply in detail to the 10,000 words of flimsy handed out by him to the press and printed in part as his epeech last night. I can only mention one or two of the points contained in that extraordinary oration.

"I am in league, he says in substance, with the insurance grafters, because some honorable members of my profession who signed my certificate of nomination happened to be retained by certain persons connected with the insurance companies in this city.

"He finds evidence of gross wickedness and deceit in the fact that a circular sent out was signed 'The Jerome Nominators,' and that it did not contain the names of the persons who were the Jerome nominators. He seems to have forgotten that there were 4,000 names actually signed to my filed petitions, and many thousand more names signed to these petitions which never were filed, and that it would be impossible to send out a circular to which should be appended all of these names.

"With his customary recklessness he says, as quoted in THE TIMES, that after returning from an interview with Messrs. Harriman and Schiff, 'hs [Jerome] called the reporters around him, held a special Grand Jury himself, and then announced his verdict that Schiff and Harriman were not guilty of any wrongdoing.' Had he taken the trouble to inquire before he made this reckless accusation he would have seen that all the papers of that date reported me as having given out a typewritten statement which was most carefully prepared and which did not in any way, shape, or manner say that Schiff or Harriman was not guilty of any wrongdoing.

"The statement was in relation to the so-called 'blind pool' in Union Pacific stock, and simply sated that I had seen Messrs. Harriman and Schiff and had examined the so-called syndicate agreement, and that the Equitable Life Assurance Society was not a party to that agreement.

"Perhaps the fairest thing that I could do in regard to the insurance matter would be now to take into my confidence the public and tell them exactly what I propose to do if re-elected.

"If re-elected District Attorney for this county, I shall go to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment and ask a special appropriation which will enable me to retain Charles E. Hughes as special counsel. I will then turn over the ordinary routine of my office to my Chief of Staff, and I will devote all of my own time and that of as many assistants as may be necessary, to assisting Mr. Hughes in prosecuting each and every person in connection with the insuranoe scandals who may have done anytning to bring them within the reach of the criminal law.

"Mr. Hughes knows this insurance situation as no other living man knows it. His ability and integrity is known, not only to the bar, but to the people generally, both as the result of his many years of practice in this county and especially because of his activities as counsel to the Gas Committee and to the Insurance Committee. This will be the way, in my opinion, moet speedily and effectually to bring to justice those connected with the insurance matter and who have committed criminal acts.

"Up to this point I have been acting in conjunction with the committes, and after conference with its Chairman, and with a sincere desire not to in any way embarrass their actions by premature activity on my part, believing that as much as it is to be desired, that wrongdoers should be brought to justice, it is of more importance that all of the facts in connection with this insurance matter should be known, in order that wise legislation may in future prevent a recurrence of the wicked acts which have dons so much to bring our business community into disgracc."

"It is extremely difficult for me, even with the full text of Mr. Osborne's remarks before me, to understand the process of his reasoning. I am in some way dishonored and made a man unfit to prosecute the insurance cases because I have been indorsed by certain people he names. It is curious to take up from the full text of his speech his own opinion of these gentlemen, who in some way dishonor me by their support. It is worth while taking the names of a few gentlemen who dishonor me and render me improper to prosecute the insurancs cases, and to quote Mr. Osborne's characterization of them.

"Of William B. Hornblower he says: 'A gentleman of great importance in this community.'

"Of Mr. John G. Milburn he says: 'A gentleman of great eminence in this community.'

"Of Francis Lynde Stetson he says: 'A high-toned and honorable lawyer.'

"Of Paul D. Cravath he says: 'One of the most celebrated corporation lawyers in the country and a man whom I greatly revere, as one of the leadere of the bar.'

"Of George L. Rives he says, 'One of the most listinguished men in the community.' Of Frederic R. Coudert he says, 'An eminent lawyer.' Of John Claflin he says, 'An honored name in this community.' Of Jacob A. Schiff he says, 'One of the greatest and most honorable financiers in this country.' Of James Speyer he says, 'One of the most honorable and mighty financiers on this continent.' Of Oscar S. Straus he says, 'A man who is honored for his character wherever the English language is spoken; an honorable, good man, full of charity,' and so on to the end of the list.

"It would seem to me that Mr. Osborne has given my nominators about as good a certificate of character as could be given to any men. By what process the support of these honorable, able, and distinguished men render me unfit to conduct the office of District Attorney in New York County I am unable to understand. The problem is too hard for me. I will leave it to the people."

Mr. Osborne was at his headquarters, in the Imperial Hotel, yesterday, showing signe of his collapee the night before, when he had to be carried from Carnegie Hall to a carriage. No arrangements have been made for his appearancs on the stump this week, and it is uncertain if he can epeak any more in the campaign. But it is announced that he will still issuc statements.

Last night he issued two statements which practically were repetitions of his speech the night before in Carnegie Hall.

LOCOMOTIVE BLOWS UP.

Man Killed, One Hurled 300 Feet Alive, in Penn. R. R. Wreck.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Oct. 29.—With a roar that was heard five miles away, a locomotive drawing a heavy freight on the Pennsylvania Railroad blew up while going at top speed near Dean's Pond this afternoon. A brakeman who was in the cab was thrown one hundred yards into a field and was not found for an hour. Boys hunting souvenirs of the wreck heard groans and summoned assistance.

Thc engineer, Charles Sterling, and his fireman, Harry Escbelman, landed a few feet away from the wrecked cab. Eschelman died before medical aid arrived, but Sterling, although he suffered a slight fracture of the skull, may recover. Charles Mervine, the injured brakeman, has practically no chance of recovery. He has a fractured skull, fracture of both arms, and is badly burned. All three men were from Philadelphia.

All that remaincd of the locomotive was the trucks, cylinders, and wheels. These slid along for 300 feet after the explosion. The tender was scarcely injured, but the heavy cars following were thrown right and left, and three jumped the track, were ground to pieces by the cars behind, and spread wreckage blocking all four tracks of the system. It was four hours before the use of the main line could be resumed. Meanwhile trains were sent around by the Amboy Division.

The point where the accident occurred is on a curve a mile beyond Dean's station, and about five miles west of this city. The operator at the little station at once set all his signals at danger, and telegraphed to this city and to Metuchen to etop all trains.

The first news of the accident received here gave rise to a rumor that the Chicago flier had been wrecked, and that sixty persons had been killed. The Pennsylvania's officials quickly made up an emergency special and sent it to the scene with the five physicians whom they had gathered on a hurry call. Sterling and Mervinc were brought back on the special and taken to the Wells Memorial Hospital.

The cause of the explosion has not been made known, but there is a theory that it was due to extra pressure put upon the boiler. It is known to be the custom to put an extra pressure of steam in rounding a curve, and it is thought that the boiler may have given way under pressure. Engineer Sterling as yet has been unable to talk. Eschelman, it is said, was busy firing, and had absolutely no warning of the explosion. The big locomotive, No. 2,052, had not been long in service, and recently was overhauled, so that it was supposed to be in perfect order.

Immense crowds gathered from all directions as the rumor of the wreck of the Chicago flier spread. The sightseere came in autos, by carriages, and on foot. The wreckers had the tracks almost cleared when they arrived.

Several of the trainmen in the caboose were thrown about, but little hurt. The spokesman of the party, who gave his name as John O'Brien, said that at the time of the accident the freight was running close to forty miles an hour.

"It was the most providential wreck I ever heard of," he said. "Not another train was within ten miles either way. The locomotive, going at high speed, blows up, and we are here to tell the tale."

SIX KILLED IN A MINE.

Superintendent, Foreman, and Four Bosses the Victims.

Special to The New York Times.

MONONGAHELA, Penn., Oct. 29.—At an early hour to-day six lives were lost in a gas explosion in the Hazel Kirk Mines, about four miles from this place. Every official connected with the big mine, which was a short time ago sold for $1,000,000, wae killed. The party had gone down on an exploring tour.

The dead are John Hornickel, Mine Superintendent, aged 35; Daniel M. Griffith, mine foreman, aged 40; John Huntsr, fire boss, aged 35; Henry Clayborne, fire boss, aged 42; John Lavery, fire boss, aged 40, and Andrew Roder, machine boss, aged 40.

Every member of the party save Roder wae killed outright, and he crawled for three hours through the dark, gas-laden passages of the mine, wounded unto death, and died as he finally reached the bottom of the shaft and gave the alarm.

Two weeks ago there had been an explosion in the same mine, and two lives were lost. Since that time the mine had been closed, in order to emother the fire. Last evening the mine officials decided that the mine could be opened up, and Manager Hornickel called on his three fire bosses, his mine foreman, and his machine boss to go into the mine with him to fix it up.

PRESIDENT'S SQUADRON MAKES RECORD RUN

Wireless Message Reports Average of Twenty Knots.

THROUGH A HEAVY SEA

President in High Spirits—Addresses the Crew of the West Virginia.

(By Wireless Telegraph.)

UNITED STATES FLAGSHIP WEST VIRGINIA, OFF SAVANNAH, Ga., Oct. 29.—A strong breeze from the northeast has kicked up a heavy sea, but notwithstanding these unfavorable circumstances, the squadron has maintained an aversge specd of 20 knots from Jupiter Light to the present point, thus breaking all rccords for any squadron in our navy.

The entire crew was mustered aft this morning and President Roosevelt delivered a short address to them. The President has spent most of the day on the forward bridge with Admiral Brownson.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Oct. 29.—The wireless station on Anastasia Island has been in communication with the cruiser West Virginia at intervals all during last night and to-day. Messages during the night conveyed news that the President was well and thoroughly enjoying the voyage, with fine weather up to that time. The cruiser had not encountered rough weather until shortly after noon to-day, when nearing Savannah it ran into the storm which has prevailed along the coast.

Last night Admiral Brownson gave a banquet to the officers of the West Virginia and its consorts in honor of the President. Ths usual Saturday evening band concert aboard was also an enjoyable feature for the President.

The West Virginia and her consorts passed by St. Auguetine shortly after 3 o'clock this morning. The vessels were nearly 100 miles off the coast. Mayor Boyce in bchalf of the citizens of St. Augustine sent a message to the President from this station offering congratulations and best wishes for a safe and pleasant voyage. The message was received and acknowledged.

The station here picked up a number of messages which were being transmitted to the President, most of which were words of congratulation and best wishes from Governors and other high officials all over the country.

Chief Electrician Elkins, in charge of the station here, says that ths weather, while cloudy and blustery, has been ideal for transmitting and receiving ths wirsless meesages. He has had no difficulty in receiving and sending messages at distances ranging from 100 to nearly 1,000 miles.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29.—Early this morning Operator P. S. Geagan, first-class electrician at the navy yard wireless station, picked up the following messagc passing from St. Augustine to President Roosevelt on board the West Virginia:

Accept congratulations and best wishes for your safe and speedy God-sent voyage, from the People of St. Augustine.

BOYCE, Mayor of St. Augustine.

LEAVENWORTH GOT MESSAGE.

Kansas Station Intercepted Aerogram from Gulf of Mexico.

LEAVENWORTH, Kan., Oct. 29.—Major G. C. Squier and Capt. Mitchell, with Company A of the Signal Corps at Fort Leavenworth, last night tried to catch wireless telegraph messages from the battleship West Virginia, but snow and rain interfered with the kites for two hours. By the time the apparatus was in order it was too late to catch any messages sent from the West Virginia.

The Signal Corps on Friday night received, in addition to wireless messages from Key West, an aerogram from the steamer Concho of the Mallory Line in the Gulf of Mexico. The aerogram was sent by Miss Mamie Fisher to her relatives in Houston, Texas, advising them that she would be in Galveston the following morning, and would reach home Sunday morning. The entire message from Miss Fisher to her home was caught at the Fort Leavenworth wireless station.

His Plight Unknown Till Starvation Ended His Life at Police Station.

A middle-aged, poorly dressed man who was sitting with his back against a fence in Rodney Street, near Metropolitan Avenue, Williamsburg, was made a target yesterday morning by a crowd of boys, who amused themselves throwing paper balls and pebbles. Ths boys were ignorant of the fact that the man was dying of starvation and exposure. They jeered and leaped over his feet.

A policeman came along and the boys fled. The policeman thought the man was asleep and tappsd ths eoles of his feet. There was no response, so the man was taken to the Bedford Avenue Police Station in a patrol wagon. He was dead when a physician got there. He was identified as Frederick Hummsl, 47 years old, who had no home. He had been a cigarmaker, well-to-do, but lost everything in speculation.

An accident at Arlington to the pipes which eupply Bayonne with water left that city suffering from a water famine for about five hours yesterday. Families had to go without special Sunday dinners on account of the lack of water.

The wells werc soon pumped dry. Long lines of men, women, and children carrying pails and pitchers wandered to and from the wells until there was no more water left. The storekeepers doled out all ths water they had, but this supply was soon exhausted.

The water was cut off about 9:30 o'clock yesterday morning and was not turned on again until about 2 in the afternoon.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., Oct. 29.—Whils searching through the papers of A. C. Henry, deceased, who had been Notary Public, doing the legal business for ths Enterprise National Bank for ten years until his death, Edward Lanam, a clerk in the Security Savings Bank, which is one square from the Enterprise, found the record of a protested note on which Senator Boies Penrose was ths indorser.

C. M. King is executor for the estate of A. C. Henry and ths attorney for the estate is Charles W. Dahlinger. When the record of the protest was laid before Mr. Dahlinger, he called the attention of John B. Cunningham, receiver of the Enterprise Bank, to the fact. POPE BROKE PLEDGE—TAFT.

He Complained to Philippine Bishops About Funds.

ROME, Oct. 29.—The Vatican authorities have received reports from the Philippines dealing especially with the recent visit of Secretary of War Taft and his attitude toward Catholic interests in the Islands.

The reports say that Mgr. Ambross Agius, the Papal Delegate, called a meeting of Bishops to discuss these interests with the Secretary.

Mr. Taft complained particularly that the money which has already been paid for the friars' lands had been taken out of the islands, and, according to the reports, "recalled the fact that Pops Leo and Cardinal Rampolla had promised him during his visit to Rome in 1902 that the money for the lands would go to the benefit of the Church in ths Philippines and not to the religious orders."

Complaint of delay in allowing ths Bishops to retake their property was made. Mr. Taft advised them to go to the Supreme Court for ths purpose of regaining the property which they claim from Archbishop Aglipay, head of the Independent Filipino Church.

The Bishops urged the payment by the Washington Government of what was due the Catbolics for the occupation of Church properties by American troops during the war, and finally set forth ths need of financial assistance from the Stats for parochial schools.

Secretary Taft, who showed an intention to satisfy totally or partially ths other requests, declared it was impossible to comply with the last one, which was against the spirit of the separation of Church and State, a fundamental principle of the United States Constitution.

STUDENT KILLED BY TRAIN.

Was Waiting to be Initiated Into a Greek Letter Fraternity.

GAMBIER, Ohio, Oct. 29.—Whils awaiting initiation into a Greek letter fraternity last night, Stewart L. Pierson, a freshman at Kenyon Collegs, was killed by a Cleveland, Akron and Columbus train.

According to members of the Delta Kappa Epsilon Fraternity, Pierson had been told to station himself at the foot of an abutment of a railroad bridge and await the coming of a committee to take him to the fraternity house for initiation. When the committee went to the bridge an hour later Pierson was not there. Investigation resulted in the finding of ths student's body on the railroad track on the bridge. How he came to be on the bridge the students do not know, they say.

Rumors were afloat to-day that Pierson had been tied to the railroad track by the initiators, but the fraternity men emphatically deny that this was done or even contemplated. Pierson was a son of L. N. Pierson, a business man of Cincinnati, who himself is a membsr of Delta Kappa Epsilon Fraternity, and had come to attend the initiation of his son. Mr. Pierson, Sr., told the members of ths fraternity that he did not attach any blame to them.

AMERICANS ARE TRYING TO GET OUT OF RUSSIA

J. P. Morgan, Jr., and G. W. Perkins Arranging for a Ship.

INSTRUCTIONS SENT TO EDDY

Citizens of This Country Will Be Allowed to Take Refuge in the Embassy—Loan Negotiations Off.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 29.—J. P. Morgan, Jr., and George W. Perkins of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., are negotiating with the Hamburg-American Line for the dispatch of a vessel to St. Petersburg to take them from the city in case of necessity. They came here in connection with the negotiations for a new Russian loan.

The Stats Department at Washington has been requested to confer authority for the charter of a vessel and the hoisting on it of the American flag as a refuge for Americans.

The embassies have as yet taken no actual steps to guard foreign residents. The question, however, has been discussed betwsen the representatives of the powers.

The negotiations for a new loan will be formally adjourned to-morrow. Neither the Russian officials nor the foreign bankers are prepared to conclude an agreement while the present situation continues.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29.—A dispatch received at the State Department to-day from Spencer Eddy, the American Chargé at St. Petersburg, said the situation in Russia was very alarming. The dispatch was the subject of a long conference between Secretary Root, who returned to this city from New York early in the evening, and Mr. Bacon, the First Assistant Secretary, who has been acting as the head of the State Department during Mr. Root's absence.

Mr. Eddy asked the department for instructions to meet any eventualities which might arise out of the condition of affairs in St. Petersburg, and late in the evening these wers cabled to him.

One feature of the instructions covers the question of the protection of Americans residing in St. Petersburg in case of a general uprising which might endanger their lives. In the event of an outbreak they will have the protection of the American Embassy until further arrangements can be made for their accommodation.

It is not believed by the State Department officials that any great number of Americans are now in St. Petersburg, as most of the tourists have left the country owing to the approach of Winter. Such Americans as may be in the interior, it is thought, are not in any danger.

The chartering of a vessel and the nationalizing of it by hoisting an American flag, in order to provide a refuge for Americans, is rather an unusual proceeding, and is not resorted to except in cases of extreme emergency, the State Department generally relying on the asylum afforded by the embassies and legations. The officials here hope that such a step will not be necessary.

Secretary Root declined to-night to give out the text of Mr. Eddy's dispatch.

In diplomatic circles the news from Russia during the past few days has caused a profound impression. Those conversant with conditions in Russia were prepared to hear at any time of disorders, but they are amazed that these should have grown to such magnitude. While members of the Diplomatic Corps are not disposed publicly to give any expression of their views, it is evident that they view with deep concern the events in the Czar's empire.

Baron Rosen, the Russian Ambassador, would not discuss the news except to say that he thought the disorders would soon cease, and that the strike would break up gradually.

SAYS CZAR HAS GIVEN IN.

Correspondent Hears the Liberal Programme Has Been Accepted.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 30.—The Daily Telegraph's St. Petersburg correspondent, telegraphing last night, says:

"I am informed that the Emperor has just accepted ths Liberal programme, appointed Count Witte Prsmier, and given legislative powers to the Representative Assembly, allowing representatives from all sections of the population to be elected to it and abolishing martial law throughout the empire. I am further informed that the Emperor will issue a manifesto to the people to-morrow."

In earlier dispatches the same correspondent describes the autocracy as like "a bulb of mercury fallen from a height and shivered into little globulets," and Russia as having become "an archipelago of political islands, each independent of the others, all dealing with public affairs with hardly any reference to the will of the once all-powerful monarch." The correspondent adds:

"Anti-monarchical sentiments which would have been a terrible crime two months ago are now in everybody's mouth. The Russian people, suddenly educated by events and sobered by a sense of responsibility, is able, willing, and determined henceforth to manage its affairs in its own way and without interference from above.

"My belief is that if the authorities abstain from violence the strike will terminate next week, because the Socialists are waiting till the end of the year for an armed insurrection, when they will be fully prepared."

TOKIO, Oct. 29.—It now appears that there are 1,978 Japanese prisoners in the hands of Russia, including noncombatants, whereas the lists furnished by Russia before the conclusion of peace showed only 976.

Indignation has been caused in Japan by this inhuman failure to relieve the anxiety of relatives. Japan has never suffered a day to elapse before dispatching full details regarding all Russian prisoners.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 29.—The Ministers have assembled at Peterhof.

The Court is in revolt against the Emperor, who is vacillating between the advics of ths Ministers, including even Gen. Trepoff, immediately to announce a Constitution, with Count Witte as Prime Minister, and the advice of the Reactionaries to proclaim a dictatorship under Count Alexis Ignatieff.

The soldiers are openly murmuring against the degrading rôle they havs been called upon to play and the privations it entails. Three hundred sailors here have mutinied.

One of the most ominous factors of the situation is the sudden development of sympathy for the Russians among the Finns. There are only 4,000 troops in the Grand Duchy. Six thousand Reservists who were sent there developed unmistakable revolutionary leanings, and had to be brought back. If the Finns were to revolt the Government could not reinforce the garrison, because every soldier is wanted here and the navy cannot be trusted.

It is announced to-night that the Finns have decided to proclaim a strike on the Finland Railway. This may be the first step toward an insurrection, which would have an immediate effect upon the revolutionary movement in Russia.

The strike has enveloped every aspect of Russian life, all the public services, and the newspapers. I know not if this message will reach you, for even the telegraph officials, whom the strike committee asked to continue work, insist on joining the movement.

The telegraph offics in which I am writing this message is surrounded by infantry in order to prevent would-be strikers from leaving work and to repel attack.

The streets are in darkness. A searchlight installed on ths tower of the Admiralty Building fitfully illuminates the Nevsky Prospect. Squads of infantry slowly patrol the thoroughfares. Ten machine guns are posted round the water works.

The Government is incapable of enforcing even a semblance of authority. There is only one ray of light—so far there has been no wholesale bloodshed here. The Government paused before making a blunder which would have been irreparable, and the various public meetings which assembled were not dispersed. The educational establishments were closed while St. Petersburg was asleep last night, but the people nevertheless assembled elsewhere, and Gen. Trepoff, in spite of all his legions, could not prevent them.

Some passengers who left London last Tuesday reached St. Petersburg this evening. The engine driver was heavily bribed.

The situation in the provinces is infinitely worse than in St. Petersburg. Mock republics have already been proclaimed in various cities, and the local authorities in many places are so powerless that the maintenance of public order has been assumed by committees of public safety.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 29.—Early this morning the men of the Fourteenth and Eighteenth Equipages of Sailors of the Guard, who have been shut up like prisoners in barracks on the Moika Canal, demolished the wadows and furniture, and in the afternoon a detachment consisting of four officers of the Guard went to the lawyers' assembly and told the barristers that many officers and a large part of the troops were disgusted with the Government and ready to enlist in the movement for freedom.

They asked for aid toward effecting an organization, and said they had discussed among themselves the question of resigning, but had decided to show that people in uniform could help to achieve liberties.

Grave doubts are expressed as to whether the Imperial Guard can now be relied upon.

Even the Cossack patrols, in keeping idlers moving in the streets to-day, seemed careful not to use their whips, and simply drove the crowds along before their advancing horses.

Several Cossacks who refused to fire on the crowds at Kieff have been arrested.

The developments all indicate that a crisis is imminent. Although the streets are filled with troops and reinforcements are now pouring in from Finland, the Government seems utterly powerless to cope with the situation, and many calm observers seriously believe that the present régime is tottering to its fall.

Differences have developed between Count Witte and Gen. Trepoff, and while the precious moments pass, the Emperor, surrounded by the imperial family, remains shut up at Peterhof, seemingly still hesitating as to what course to pursue.

A meeting of the Municipal Council was held this evening at which a deputation of thirty members of the strikers' committee appeared. In an impassioned speech the leader of the deputation presented the following demands of the workmen and affiliated organizations:

First—A Constitution and political liberty.

Second—That the city furnish food to the workmen.

Third—That the city refuse further supplies to the troops and the police.

Fourth—That the troops be removed from the water works, or otherwise the strikers would cut the water supply.

Fifth—The immunity of the deputation from arrest.

The Council granted the last demand and promised to reply to the other demands to-morrow. The Council sent requests to both Gen. Trepoff and the Minister of the Interior not to arrest the members of the deputation, but the police nevertheless took them into custody. Upon urgent representations Gen. Trepoff an hour later released them.

A strike in the Post Office, including the telegraph operators, began to-night, and communication with the interior practically ceased. Army operators were placed in the telegraph offices, but only a few lines are working. Many lines, including the land lines to the Continent and to Libau, where they connect with the cable, have been cut.

At 10 P. M. the cable by way of Nystad and Sweden was still open. This is now the only thread connecting Russia with the outer world. Admiral Durnovo, Superintendent of Posts and Telegraphs, told the representative of a European power this afternoon that he could not tell how long cable communication with the Continent would last. No telegrams are coming in.

The Government is no longer in communication with the forces in the Far East, except by cable by way of China.

The university, the Polytechnic Institute, and all the other educational institutions here were closed to-day so as to prevent further meetings being held in them. The university and the Polytechnic Institute were surrounded by troops, who blocked all the adjacent streets, and the students and professors were kept within the confines of the institutions.

Even the druggists have struck, and as there are many sick the physicians have divided the city into districts, and have also selected stations for the giving of first aid to the wounded in case of collisions between the troops and the people.

The Director of the Imperial Theatres to-day called a meeting of actors and actresses, who decided to cease their performances to-morrow.

Representatives of The Associated Press drove through all sections of the city to-day. Troops were everywhere in evidence as if to overawe the people, but although there were many rumors of bloody collisions, none of them could be authenticated. There were great crowds of workmen in the industrial quarters, but their behavior was orderly.

All the military reserves are kept closely in barracks under arms and at the Horse Guard barracks back of Gen. Trepoff's chancellery the horses are kept constantly saddled, ready to emerge at a moment's notice.

The Russian capital is like a city in the possession of a foreign army. Tonight again the soldiers are bivouacking in the dark and otherwise deserted streets. The Nevsky Prospect alone is flooded by the glare of the great searchlight fixed on the spire of the Admiralty Building. The curious are drawn there like moths to a candle. Even in the Nevsky Prospect many windows of shops are boarded up.

A train arrived to-night from Germany in charge of a railroad battalion, having been four days covering the distance from the frontier.

Many meetings were held to-night in various quarters of the city at which the workmen, encouraged by the success of the movement, were in a jubilant and confident spirit. The better classes, as a rule, are keeping closely to their houses.

The situation cannot well be exaggerated. With the present indecision of the Emperor, the Government has neither a head nor a policy to meet the crisis, and things seem to be drifting toward anarchy. The Revolutionists openly declare that the Government has ceased to exist and that nothing remains to the Czar except to abdicate. With a firm hand at the helm and a rational policy, however, all might quickly be changed.

The strikers are apparently without funds and must soon be exhausted, as was made evident by the fact that the strike committee here has practically been forced to hold up the city for food.

The Government and the Liberals are at a loss to know whose is the contriving brain behind the great strike. The directing hand is invisible, though its workings are plainly evident.

It is thought that the strike may have been directed from Switzerland or Germany and executed here through the Social Democratic organization, in which representatives of the workmen and students are equally active. The organization is able to sway the great student body through its student members, and everywhere to-day the students were seen mingling with the workmen and taking an active part in their movement.

Among countless baseless reports which received credence to-day were rumors that the Emperor had embarked on a vessel and fled to Denmark, that Gen. Trepoff had been killed by a bomb, and that Vice Admiral Birileff had been assassinated by mutineers in the Black Sea.

HELSINGFORS, Oct. 29.—A strike has been proclaimed on the Finnish Railway from St. Petersburg to the frontier station of Valkeasaari.

STOCKHOLM, Oct. 29.—It is reported that Father Gapon has left Christiania for the Continent.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 30.—The Standard's correspondent at Odessa says:

"It is reported from Kieff that three regiments have mutinied in the southwestern provinces, and there are alarming reports here of the doubtful fidelity of three battalions of infantry."

CIVIL WAR AT ODESSA.

Anarchy at Tiflis — Troops Attacked at Riga—Soldiers Leave Reval.

ODESSA, Oct. 29.—Cossacks have commenced firing on crowds of workmen and students, who have barricaded street corners with street railway poles and furniture.

At one point a volley from the Cossacks killed one student, three workmen, and a girl, and wounded eighteen persons.

Rifle and revolver firing is heard all over the city.

The Governor in a proclamation said that the first stone thrown at the military would be the signal for the troops to fire. He has asked St. Petersburg for authority to proclaim martial law, but has not received an answer.

All the streets and squares are full of Cossacks and police.

Citizens have formed a committee for public defense.

In a demonstration at Sevastopol today a Lieutenant and a Sergeant of Police were wounded by shots from a crowd. Many persons were arrested, but were afterward liberated.

LONDON, Monday, Oct. 30.—A dispatch to a news agency from Odessa says there have been two serious conflicts there between the troops and a mob, in which twenty-seven persons were killed and ninety were wounded.

The dispatch adds that quiet was restored at 7 o'clock last evening.

A dispatch to The Standard from Odessa, timed 7 o'clock last evening, says:

"A collision between the military and a crowd of students and strikers occurred an hour ago in Tiraspoloskaya Street. The soldiers without warning fired point blank into the people, killing twenty and wounding sixty. The students are holding a stormy conclave at the university.

"I have had an interview with Gen. Kaulbars, Commander in Chief of the Odessa military district, who said that the position was a grave one, but that he did not yet consider himself warranted in asking the authorities again to impose martial law. His great fear appeared to be that a general attack would be made on the Jews, in which case, he said, he would use all the forces at his disposal for their protection.

"Subsequently I saw the Civil Governor, who seemed to be more nervous about the situation, but who declined to discuss it."

TIFLIS, Oct. 29.—Anarchy reigns here.

There is rifle firing against the patrols in many quarters of the city. A bomb was thrown at a policeman today.

A military train has been derailed outside the city and a number of Cossacks were killed.

The strike is complete on all the railroads in the Caucasus.

All the stores and offices here are closed.

Even the employes of the State institutions and the headquarters of the Viceroyalty have struck.

RIGA, Oct. 29.—There were several encounters to-day between the dragoons and mobs.

The dragoons were three times fired upon by the crowds. The details are not obtainable.

The situation is growing worse.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 29.—The following telegram has been received from Vladikavkaz, Northern Caucasia.

"Brigands derailed a mail train tonight near Grozny. They fired on the passengers, killing twelve and wounding twenty, after which they looted the train and decamped with the mails."

The strikers and Reactionaries are fighting at Rostoff-on-Don. Attempts to pillage the Jewish synagogues and houses were stopped by the police.

A bomb was thrown at policemen at Gomel to-day and two policemen were killed.

At Kharkoff order has been restored only after the Governor formally instructed the troops not to fire.

Upon the demand of the "Black Heads" at Reval the soldiers were sent out of that city, the prisoners were freed, and the place was left in charge of local militia, which had been organized by the citizens.

At Kieff to-day a Sergeant of Police was killed and another policeman was wounded while searching a room in a hotel. Many revolvers and cartridges were found in the room. Great crowds are on the streets.

Nizhni Novgorod was disturbed today by rumors that the "Black Hundred," a band of roughs, was about to commence a massacre of all well-to-do persons. The Governor, however, has issued a proclamation reassuring the people.

FIGHTING BEGUN AT MOSCOW.

Royalists and Liberals Clash—Reported Ultimatum to Czar.

MOSCOW, Oct. 29.—Nineteen wounded men have been brought to the University Hospital as the result of an encounter between students and Royalists.

The Governor General has issued a proclamation warning the Royalists, who wish to attack the Liberals, that this will not be permitted.

The city is entirely isolated. Prices of food are mounting higher and higher.

The Russky Viedomosti, the best-known newspaper here, prints an article demanding as the only way to restore tranquility the concession of all the demands of the people.

ST. PETERSBURG, Oct. 29.—According to privato reports from Moscow the Municipal Council and the Committee of Public Safety are sitting continuously and a struggle is momentarily expected between the League of Russian Patriots, a Reactionary organization led by the priests, and the newly organized militia and the students. The Moscow Municipal Council is reported to have sent an ultimatum to the Emperor demanding the promulgation of a Constitution.

Although it is impossible officially to confirm these reports, they seem to leave no doubt that the anti-Government forces have the upper hand.

POLISH MANUFACTURERS FLEE.

No Newspapers in Warsaw—Several Persons Wounded at Lodz.

WARSAW, Oct. 29.—The Governor has forbidden the publication of even official news concerning the riots in Russia.

The authorities acknowledge that the situation is extremely serious. All the manufacturers left the city to-day. The theatres are closed and no newspapers are being published.

The workmen in all the factories at Radom, Kielce, and Kalisz have struck.

Disturbances have occurred at Lodz, where several persons were wounded, and in the Opatow district, where a policeman was killed and the Chief of Police was wounded.

The employes of the Vienna Railroad have resolved to continue the strike until political liberties are granted.

COMMANDER EVA BOOTH ILL.

Appendicitis, Baltimore Hears, but It Is Nervous Exhaustion.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 29.—A telegram announcing that Commander Eva Booth of the Salvation Army was critically ill with appendicitis at army headquarters in New York City turned the big Salvation Army jubilee at Ford's Opera House this afternoon, at which she was to have been the central figure, into a sorrowful meeting of prayers for her recovery.

One of the officers at the headquarters of the Salvation Army stated last night that Commander Eva Booth was not suffering from appendicitis, as reported. An attack of nervous exhaustion, brought on by her arduous trip through Pennsylvania and Ohio last week, had prevented Miss Booth from going to Baltimore as arranged. The officer added that the illness was not of a serious nature.

ROCKEFELLER TO NEWSBOYS.

Sends His Love—Pastor Values Trunk More Than Wealth.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Oct. 29.—Headed by the Salvation Army and Josephine Mission bands, 2,000 newsboys marched from the Public Square this afternoon to the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church and held a rally.

A telegram from John D. Rockefeller, in New York, was read by the pastor, Dr. Charles A. Eaton:

"I wish I could be with you at the newsboys' meeting to-day. I send most hearty regards and love to every boy."

The newsboys went wild over the message. They stamped their feet, clapped their hands, yelled, and whistled. This reply was sent to Mr. Rockefeller:

"Same here. Sorry you couldn't come. Be here next time."

Dr. Eaton told the boys that he left the farm in 1884 for the high school, and took a little trunk with him. "And I wouldn't take all John D. Rockefeller's money twice over for that little trunk now, either," he said.

MRS. PEPPER WILL KEEP ON.

Now Invites the Brooklyn Pastors to Test Her Powers.

May S. Pepper, pastor of the First Spiritualist Church of Brooklyn, proposes to keep on with her "manifestations" as usual. The church, at Bedford Avenue and Madison Street, was crowded last night. Ex-Judge A. H. Daley, foremost of Mrs. Pepper's devotees, called those present to order and declared that despite persecution and prosecution the "greatest priestess of all the world" would continue her mission. He said that all the pastors of Brooklyn would be invited to meet her and test her powers, and that a memorial extending the invitation would be circulated among her followers. All that she asked for was a fair chance.

Mrs. Pepper then preached as usual and proceeded with her regular round of letter reading and spirit counsels.

DR. MACARTHUR PRAYS IN CHURCH FOR JEROME

The District Attorney Speaks There for Fundamental Moralities

ALL RISE TO GREET HIM

Several Speak for Him—Ballot Box as Sacred as Communion Table, Dr. Peters Says.

District Attorney Jerome spoke to 1,500 men and women at the people's meeting at the Church of the Epiphany at Madison Avenue and Sixty-fourth Street, yesterday afternoon, and when he had finished the Rev. Dr. R. S. MacArthur prayed for his success.

Mr. Jerome's topic was "The Duty of the Church Toward Civic Righteousness." The Rev. Dr. Madison C. Peters, who has worked with Dr. MacArthur in getting up the meetings, said in his introductory remarks that Mr. Jerome was present "not as a candidate, but as a citizen. "The meeting, however, was as much a political meeting in favor of a certain candidacy as any at which the District Attorney has spoken.

If there had been any doubts on this point at all, they would have been disposed of by the "general discussion" alone that followed the speaker's address. That discussion was a series of little speeches with the ever recurring refrain, "We want Jerome." No audible demonstration of any other kind was made. When Mr. Jerome walked up to the platform a man half rose from his seat in one of the front pews and looked around, hesitating.

Another man near by saw him and rose. Two women followed his example. And then, with a rustle, all stood up, and remained on their feet till the speaker had been escorted to the chair reserved for him. The same thing happened at the end of the meeting when Mr. Jerome left the platform.

After leading in the recital of the Lord's Prayer, Dr. Peters called attention to a Scripture lesson which, he thought, fitted the occasion as if written for it. It was:

"And they said: 'Thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken aught of any man's hand.'"

After a brief explanation of the character and origin of the meetings, Dr Peters said before introducing Dr. MacArthur:

"Some people do not believe in mixing religion and politics. I suppose they have not got religion to mix. If the political ditch is dirty, it is our duty to get down and clean it out."

Dr. MacArthur warned against a too wide separation of patriotism and religion, and held that the better the churchman the better the citizen. A stir went through the church when he added:

"In its place and for its purpose the ballot box is as sacred as is the communion table in its place and for its purpose."

In introducing Mr. Jerome, Dr. MacArthur described him as "courageous to the last degree, fearing neither man nor devil," and as "the loyal citizen, the faithful official, the patriotic American, and the manly man, William Travers Jerome."

Not a seat was left unoccupied and many hundreds were standing when Mr. Jerome said that he would not have spoken on Sunday and in church if he had not believed that a high moral principle was at stake.

"Through the force of circumstance," he continued, "New York has become the focus of our whole great people. They are waiting to see what shall be done here. They are watching to see whether in a great city like this, full of men of all races and creeds, a principle, just a principle—not a party, not a candidate, but just a poor naked principle—can so take hold of the hearts of men that they will do on the 7th of November what thousands and thousands all through this land outside of this city are hoping that they will do."

Once more he used the simile of the standard bearer in the battle, and said his fate was insignificant as long as the colors went forward.

"I read in the sacred book," he went on, "that the Greeks raised an altar to the unknown god. Sometimes I think that in these latter days of subservience, when idealism has almost disappeared, we would do well to raise an altar to the impractical man, to the man among us who has still got some faith in principle.

"In politics, in business, everywhere, we are always looking at the consequences. I hear so many good men give their advice with a fearful note in it. This and that thing is not practical, they say. That is their measure and test of goodness and right. But to me it seems that if we do the work that lies in hand, if we put our faith and our hope and our trust in a principle, in something based on the fundamental moralities of life, in something that is sound and true, then we need not bother our heads about the results. We can leave the results to a higher Power who works in ways that we do not know.

"Our life is certainly a whole. There is not one morality for Sunday and another one for the six weekdays. There is not one morality for 364 days of the year and another one for election day. It seems to me that, in our fear and our hopelessness, we overlook the great fundamental moralities."

In simple terms Mr. Jerome then repeated the story of his appeal to the people. Throughout his remarks there was no personal reference of any kind, and when using the word "boss" he did so in a generic way only.

"If the public servant can go over the head of the boss to the people in this boss-ridden city," he said in conclusion, "the same thing can be done in every city and town and hamlet throughout the land. It means that others can and will do it. It means, in the highest and truest sense, that government of and by and for the people will come back, as it should do. If on the 7th of November victory comes, as I believe it will, think what hope it will put into the hearts of men throughout our broad land. Think what it means to our young man that he may come forward to serve the people because such service will mean an appeal simply to the people, and to the people alone. This, it seems to me, fellow-citizens, is the moral of this campaign."

After a few additional remarks by Dr. Peters, the Rev. Dr. Francis Clay Moran expressed the sympathy of the Episcopal Church with the purpose of the meeting and with Mr. Jerome's fight. A young man in the rear of the church gave a few illustrations of how the movement had taken hold of the young men of the city. The Rev. Edwin Whittier Caswell said he thought one of the darkest moments in the history of this city was when the conventions of the two principal political parties refused to indorse Mr. Jerome. A German Socialist spoke, and two Jews, one of middle age and the other one young, then spoke for Mr. Jerome on behalf of the east side. Other speakers were Dr. Norman Fox and Gilbert Ray Hawes.

Dr. MacArthur closed the meeting with this prayer:

"Almighty and Everlasting God, we thank Thee for this meeting and for the words spoken by him who is our leader in this crusade; for his modesty, his gentleness, his manliness, and his bravery. God bless him! May his bow abide in strength. May he be strong in the sense of justice and truth. God help us on the 7th of November. May we lift up a banner clean and sweet and pure in New York. May we give courage and hope to the young men all over our broad land, and may there come good to all the people and glory to the Lord God, now and forever."

Before leaving the church Mr. Jerome held an impromptu reception in the pastor's study and shook hands with as many as could crowd into it. Hundreds were waiting outside to shake hands with him or to get a last glimpse of him as he left the church.

COOL WOMAN AT A FIRE.

"If It Gets Dangerous, You May Rescue Me," She Told the Policeman.

While the Beckers were entertaining some friends in the front room of their apartments on the fourth floor of the tenement at 61 Forsyth Street yesterday afternoon flames were seen to burst from the kitchen and bedroom. The occupants ran down stairs crying "fire!" and frightening the other eight families in the house.

Miss Bessie Libowitz and her week-old baby were left on the third floor. When the tenants reached the street some one thought of them. Policeman Waltman of the Eldridge Street Station ran upstairs to the third floor. He rapped on the door.

"Who's there?" came back in faint tones.

"It's a policeman; the house is afire and I want to save you."

"Wait a minute and I'll open the door," came back.

By this time the hall was filled with smoke and flames were licking the windows of the third floor. A woman, carrying a baby, tottered to the door, unlocked it, and peered out, very cool.

"You'd betted get a few things together and hurry out; there's no time to lose," said the policeman.

"Is there really any danger, officer?" inquired the woman. "I am not one of those women who get frightened at a little thing. No, I will etay here. I will go back to bed and you can remain out in the hall, and if it gets too dangerous you may come in and rescue me."

Before the policeman recovered his breath the door was closed. But he persuaded her to let him take the baby to a neighbor's house until the confusion was over.

The fire was put out with a loss of $1,000.

INVALID'S RUSE DETECTED.

In Saloon, with Family in Steerage, He Hid Eye Disease a While.

When the American liner New York came into port on Saturday there were on board Henry Hayson and his wife and children, who had embarked at Cherbourg, France. Hayson came as a saloon passenger. His wife and children were in the steerage. As soon as the liner warped to her dock Hayson came ashore. His family was sent to Ellis Island.

Yesterday he went to Ellis Island to bring his family to town. While waiting for their effects to be examined Hayson was recognized by several immigration inspectors as a man who was deported some months ago because he was suffering from trachoma, a disease of the eye. He was taken into custody immediately and detained. Although he had passed an examination at Quarantine, his affliction escaped notice, and he got a clean bill of health. When he was subjected to another examination yesterday it was seen that he had the disease.

When he came here before Hayson was a steerage passenger on a French liner. His wife and children were then detained with him. To-day the case will be taken before the Immigration Board and the entire family will probably be deported once more.

"The First Complete Piano"

A Type of Piano Perfection Conceded to be the Piano Triumph of the Day

ANY RADICAL departure affecting the art of music has hitherto required years to find its way into the public's favor. In wide contrast was the general acceptance of the Pianola Piano. The very announcement that there had been combined with the piano a means whereby that instrument might be artistically played, met with instant enthusiasm.

Music lovers everywhere were quick to accept the new piano because it represented a great step in advance—the combination instrument retaining unimpaired the full resources of the piano, the improvement consisting simply in adding to the hitherto accepted type of piano the complete ability to play all music.

A clear understanding of this fact witnessed the most remarkable reception ever accorded a musical instrument, and all over America, in the most prominent homes, the highest grade pianos are constantly being exchanged for

THE PIANOLA PIANO

Hitherto piano builders had aimed only at the production of a better tone-quality, a more perfect action, etc., nothing being done to remedy the one great deficiency of the instrument itself—its incompleteness in not affording some means wherewith it might be played.

With this deficiency supplied and a piano produced that enables even the non-musician to artistically play all music, is it any wonder that four large factories are unable to keep pace with the demand?

Any make of piano will be taken in exchange for a Pianola Piano.
Easy monthly payments will be accepted.

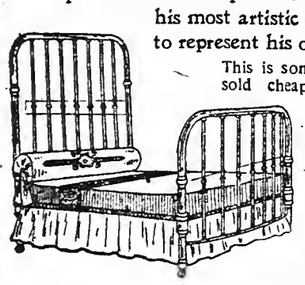
$45 sample brass beds 28.50

SAMPLE BRASS BEDS are desirable beds to buy, because they represent the finest product of the manufacturer, who picks out his most artistic designs and the best constructed beds to represent his output in the showroom exhibitions.



This is sometimes doubted because they are sold cheaper than regular stock beds.

This is because there are only one or two designs of a kind—not enough to make up regular orders—and it is less expensive to send them to us from the New York showrooms at a third off than to ship them back to the factory. Fifth Floor.

These are all of the popular four-foot size beds—massive two-inch continuous posts—best French lacquer.

These sales always create unusual interest, and while we do not limit this sale to Monday we cannot promise you a $45.00 bed at $28.50 after to-day.

WILL YOU STICK? IVINS AGAIN ASKS M'CLELLAN

And Was McGowan Your Choice for a Place on the Ticket?

RENEWS JOINT DEBATE OFFER

The Republican Candidate Sends Another Open Letter to the Mayor Repeating His Questions.

Before he left for the country yesterday to get some rest before resuming his campaign to-day William M. Ivins indited another open letter to Mayor McClellan. This is the way Mr. Ivins began:

"A fortnight ago I addressed you a letter, to which I regret not having received a reply. It would have afforded me the greatest pleasure to meet you on a common platform and to discuss the issues of the campaign, but your silence has been equivalent to a declination. I recognize that you are entirely in your right in declining to answer my several questions, but you, on your part, must also recognize that I am equally in my right in repeating them."

Mr. Ivins then goes on to outline to Mr. McClellan a few subjects upon which he wants light. He says:

"I think it would at this time be particularly gratifying to the great constituency of four millions of people to which you appeal to know with precise and unequivocal definiteness whether you will remain for the full term, if elected. Some of your platform declarations contain the intimation, but not the clear and unmistakable promise that, if elected, you will be as good as your contract. If you mean to stick, why will you not say so frankly, over your signature, not merely from a platform where your utterances are not necessarily recorded with precision?

"In this connection, and in view of the probability of your retirement, if elected, I am sure the voters of Greater New York would be glad to know whether Mr. McGowan was your own selection for the Presidency of the Board of Aldermen and as your possible successor, and if not, why you are willing to run on the same ticket with him, with the possibility of his succeeding to your office dependent entirely upon your own volition in the event of your election."

Mr. Ivins then takes up the statement of Mr. McClellan that it would not necessarily follow if he were elected that all of the present heads of departments would be retained, and treats that subject much in the same strain as he did in his former communication to the Mayor. He asks the Mayor why, if he thinks any of his heads of departments are not the men for the places they occupy, he does not drop them before election instead of waiting until the first of the year. Continuing, Mr. Ivins says:

"One of your most ardent supporters among the press asserts that you have seen your past errors and promises for you that you will not repeat them in the future. May I ask whether this is correct or not, and, if so, what you regard as your errors and why you do not strive to correct them now?

"One of the prominent issues of the campaign is that of municipal ownership. I notice that while you and your friends are striving to attract votes by boasting of what has been done in respect to the municipalization of the Staten Island Ferry and of electric lighting, in the hope of securing votes from those who believe in municipal ownership, you simultaneously hope to get votes from those who do not believe in it by denouncing its advocates."

Mr. Ivins reiterates his own position on the municipal ownership issue, and makes these inquiries of Mr. McClellan:

"Votes are being sought for you on the ground that in respect of these propositions you, in some way, differ from me and that your administration of the office would be safer than mine. If you differ will you kindly state so and wherein? If you do not differ, will you tell me how, or whether your administration, particularly in view of your relations to Tammany Hall, could begin to be as safe or as sane as mine?

"It has been repeatedly stated during the present campaign in your behalf that new works have been initiated, and that there has been an improvement in the administration of each of the departments. For purposes of specification will you not kindly say precisely what public improvement has been initiated by you and in what department there has been administrative improvement?

"In closing permit me to repeat what I said a fortnight ago, namely, that I should be pleased to discuss these or any other issues of the campaign with you at any time and place you may yourself select."

TAMMANY'S WHIRLWIND FINISH

Postal Cards and Posters to be Issued by the Thousand.

Orators, literature, cartoons, and postal cards will be let loose, mostly directed against Hearst, without stint by Tammany to-day at the opening of the last week of the campaign.

In this last week the organization will make one of the hottest campaigns in its history. The district leaders have all been instructed to make the fight of their lives on Hearst, ignoring Ivins. Noon meetings will be held daily, at factories and in sections where workingmen can be brought together in any number.

The 500 orators who are working in Manhattan and the Bronx alone have received their cues on the talk to be made. They will call the attention of the workingmen to the promises made in the Hearst papers in Chicago in the campaign ended with the election of Mayor Dunne. These promises included three-cent carfares, with higher wages to the street car employes and an eight-hour day for them. These things were to come with municipal ownership, and the orators are instructed to point out that Chicago has been able to do nothing toward redeeming the promises. Not one of them has been kept even in part.

In addition to the noon meetings there will be night meetings all over the city. Fully 200 outdoor meetings will be held each night in Manhattan and the Bronx alone, and Senator McCarren is arranging almost an equal number for Brooklyn. There will also be at least one indoor meeting each night in each of the sixty-one Assembly districts of Greater New York.

Office Boys Help Jerome.

A check for $104 was received last Saturday at the Jerome headquarters from one of the leading publishing houses in the city. Inquiry as to the oddness of the sum elicited the information that the four odd dollars represented the contributions of four office boys.

LABOR BODY DIVIDED IN OPINION OF HEARST

He Wouldn't Promise to Name Unionist for Keating's Place.

LIVELY FINISH TO CAMPAIGN

Managers Plan Outdoor Tours for Candidate—Ford Appeals to Republicans Against Bossism.

Organized labor, as represented in the Central Federated Union, both pounded and petted William Randolph Hearst yesterday. The report of a committee appointed four weeks ago, to ascertain from each of the candidates for Mayor if, in case of election, he would appoint a labor man Commissioner of Licenses instead of Commissioner Keating, started the debate.

Delegate De Veaux of the Actors' Protective Union reported that on two visits to Mayor McClellan's office, they had interviews with the Mayor's secretary, Mr. O'Brien.

"Mr. O'Brien told us," De Veaux said, "that Mayor McClellan realized that a labor man was best for the place, but that Mr. Keating, being a faithful officer, also would be provided for."

Mr. Elsberg, the representative of Mr. Ivins, told the committee that he had not the slightest doubt that were Mr. Ivins elected about the first thing he would do would be to appoint a labor man as Commissioner of Licenses.

It took some manoeuvering, it appeared, before the committee could see Mr. Hearst. Mr. Hearst said, according to De Veaux's report:

"I do not feel as if I would like to be tied down to any promises. I know the position I have taken and who my friends are. If I am elected Mayor, I shall stand by the people and live up to the principles I have always advocated. I think organized labor knows its friends, and that I am one of them."

A whistle was heard from some one, and another delegate shouted, "Bully boy!"

"Are there only three Mayoralty candidates?" asked Charles Delaney of the Granite Cutters' Union. "Why haven't the people seen the Socialist candidate?"

There was a ripple of laughter, and the Socialist delegates were offended. Delegate Abrams of the Franklin Association of Pressmen, a Socialist, exclaimed:

"I suppose you have been reading the Hearst papers, and, of course, you think by them that there is only one honest man in Greater New York, William Randolph Hearst. Doesn't he tell us so in his own papers, and isn't that enough? He says he is the greatest friend of the working people, so it must be true.

"I tell you, working men who believe this, that you are in a fool's paradise. Don't be carried away by this Municipal Ownership nonsense. You will find that William Randolph Hearst will do nothing for you when he is elected, if he is elected. You will then come down with a flop."

The meeting became uproarious. Delegate Fitzgerald of the Letter Carriers' Union defended Mr. Hearst as the Letter Carriers' best friend and was applauded. The committee was instructed to sound the Socialist candidate, Mr. Lee.

Mr. Hearst will devote the last week of the campaign to whirlwind tours of the outlying boroughs and thickly populated districts in Manhattan. Cart-tail oratory and open-air meetings will be a feature. To-night Mr. Hearst will invade the lower east side and speak in five halls and at nine open-air meetings if his voice holds out.

The Hearst managers intended that he make a sweep of the entire east side from East Broadway to 125th Street, a seven-mile line, in a single night. Mr. Hearst's objection put an end to this plan.

Arrangements have been completed for a whirlwind finish against Borough President Cassidy in Queens. The largest halls in Long Island City, Flushing, Newtown, Richmond Hill, and Jamaica have been rented. Hearst probably will devote two evenings this week to Queens, accompanied by Joseph Bermel, beginning to-morrow night.

On Friday evening it has been planned to have Mr. Hearst make a tour through Staten Island. The Bronx also will receive some attention, and Brooklyn is to be visited again.

At noon to-day the candidate will address his first open air meeting at the foot of West Eleventh Street. The Hearst managers intend to make a strong bid for the longshoreman vote.

The Independent Republican Organization of Greater New York, made up largely of followers of ex-Senator Ford, will send out to-day a circular to 100,000 Republican voters in this city calling upon them to vote for Hearst, Ford, and Stokes. Following is an extract:

"We would naturally prefer to follow the organization that legally carries the word Republican at the head of its ticket had its principles or leaders been free from corrupt alliances. But it is bereft of principles and honest leaders.

"It has been led into ambush and deserted by its leaders. Platt advises desertion to Tammany Hall. Odell, after failing in every direction to find a candidate who would suit him, ran away.

"We believe the time has come for the rank and file of the Republican Party to destroy bossism in the party.

"We believe the time has come to separate the business and elections of the municipality from the business and elections of the National Republican Party.

"Don't repeat the mistake of the Tracy-Low campaign! Hearst, Ford, and Stokes will win. Ivins cannot win. His backers will not permit him to win. The stake is not less than a billion dollars in franchises."

PEDDLERS FOR McCLELLAN.

They'll Parade for Him Wednesday Afternoon and Evening.

The Peddlers' Association of New York, after indorsing the candidacy of Mayor McClellan for re-election, decided yesterday to make a half holiday of Wednesday, to hold a McClellan parade on its own account in the afternoon, and to participate in the big evening parade. Sigmund Schwartz, who will be the peddlers' Grand Marshal, says 10,000 men will turn out.

There were six peddlers' meetings to consider the municipal campaign. The largest one was that held at 62 Pitt Street. There were also meetings at 73 Ludlow Street, 98 Forsyth Street, 26 Delancey Street, 83 and 85 Forsyth Street, and 62 Essex Street. The meetings were addressed by Assemblyman Edward Rosenheim, Alderman Pool, Moritz Klein, Sigmund Schwartz, and others. The total attendance was several thousand. The resolutions indorsing Mayor McClellan's administration and promising the support of the pushcart men went through with a whoop.

THE ONE GREAT ISSUE JEROME'S, SAYS ADLER

We Know He Will Be an Enemy of Graft, the Doctor Declares.

HE DOESN'T SHUT HIS EYES

Honest Men Who Associate with Dishonest a Disappointment, the Speaker Tells Ethical Culturists.

Dr. Felix Adler chose the ethics of the municipal campaign as his theme before the Ethical Culture Society yesterday morning at the Carnegie Hall. He said that parsons ought, as a general thing, to avoid politics, but that the rule was an exception when a political issue unmistakably raised a great moral issue.

Dr. Adler said that he found no great moral issue in municipal ownership or the abolition of the mortgage tax, because there was an honest difference of opinion on these questions. Municipal ownership, he added, was only a means to an end, anyway. He continued:

"The one indisputable moral issue in this campaign is that raised by the District Attorney. First, there is a personal element involved. The other night when the campaign opened I heard one man say to his neighbor: 'I believe that that man is really honest.' [Laughter.] The deep-laid skepticism of the American people about public officials made him make the reluctant confession that for once he had probably been deceived. It is a great thing for a man to be able to wring this out. I fear the conditions of American life make us ever suspicious. Newspaper attacks, sometimes true, sometimes wrong, sometimes too highly colored, the revelations that are made from time to time, make us suspicious. A man rises and makes promises of what he will do after he is elected, he will cringe to no one, he will act with a single eye to the public service. We say professions are as leaves in these October days. They fall around on every hand without seed or fruit. Promises result in nothing. Once elected and intrusted with power, who will see that that man keeps his promises and redeems his pledges?

"But now and then there arises a man in the country who allays all our suspicions, who is honest through and through. How does he give us this impression? It is a question of his personality that somehow makes him known to his associates as honest. If he cannot do what is impossible, he will try to do it. He points to his record; he has nothing to conceal, and if we knew more of him we should respect him more. Above all, he is not only personally clean and is not only standing on a clean spot. He does not close his eyes and support with his unblemished reputation the wicked system of which he is a part. We know that to the full extent of his power he will be an enemy of graft and grafters, a very stumbling block in their way.

"Then there is another personal element in the opportunity to allay social unrest. He can encourage law-abiding spirits. We have got to go through a period of social unrest and economic trouble. We cannot evade it. Every great nation has got to go through it. It is something to be sure it will be within the limits of the law and peaceful in its development. We must make the wealthy classes accept the law and we must make the poor accept the law. I have no sympathy or tenderness with either class of lawbreakers, and all lawlessness must be stopped. We must set the example of this for the immigrants. The law courts before which they are brought for the collection of taxes or for the settlement of petty wrongs must be the real abodes of law. Then America will bear aloft the light of liberty, not only in the harbor, but in its law courts, and the District Attorney will be the attorney of the whole people and not of one class. What a great thing it would be if in this city, with all its immigration, there were a guarantee of peaceful development in the possession of an attorney for the people who is above all suspicion in his private reputation. For, however unwise and intemperate he may have occasionally been in words, he is always conservative in his actions.

"We have now in the law courts men who are not subject to influence, but they cannot mete out justice to rich and poor alike. They can try, but the rich have the advantages of wealth, the acumen of counsel, the profit from delays, and so their actions are found to be always within the letter of the law, while in spirit they break it in every particular, while the poor blundering criminal is caught at his first offense. The sense of injustice, of being defrauded, willfully defrauded, will rankle in the poor man's breast, and the good that is accomplished by an honest District Attorney will be important, however little it is.

THE GERMANS CELEBRATE.

Claim Lincoln in a Tableau—Hearst's Photographer There.

The 222d anniversary of the coming to America of Pastorius and his band of Germans from Crefeld, resulting in the founding of Germantown, Penn., was observed yesterday by the United German Societies of New York at Terrace Garden. There were addresses, a concert both afternoon and evening, calisthenics by the younger members of turn vereins, and a series of tableaux showing "The Germans a Thousand Years in America." The ceremonies also included a celebration in honor of Schiller. Terrace Garden never had a larger audience of Germans.

An address for the maintenance of a united Germany was made by Prof. Eugene Kuehnemann of Posen, who stirred his hearers.

When Lincoln was depicted in the tableaux it was declared that he was of German descent, that the family name was originally the German name Linkhorn, and that in the early days of the family in Virginia it became corrupted into Lincoln.

One tableau represented Roosevelt and William II. clasping hands.

Official Photographer O'Brien, attached to William R. Hearst's photography squad, was on hand and took several flashlight pictures while the audience was applauding.

MANY LAWYERS PLEDGED TO MAYOR M'CLELLAN

One Is John G. Milburn, Who Presided at a Jerome Meeting.

SOME LOW MEN HAVE TURNED

Letters from Edward M. Shepard, John Bigelow, Frederic R. Coudert, John Claflin, and Others.

Ever since Mayor McClellan was renominated letters of congratulation and support, written by leading members of the bar of both political faiths, have been piling in at his headquarters in the Hotel Bartholdi.

Extracts from several of the letters were made public last night. One of the strongest was written by John G. Milburn, who presided at District Attorney Jerome's Carnegie Hall meeting week before last. Mr. Milburn was attacked for this action by James W. Osborne at the Carnegie Hall meeting Saturday night.

"I cannot let the campaign close," Mr. Milburn wrote to the Mayor, "without an expression of my admiration for your part in it. Every serious man admits that we are confronted by grave and complicated municipal problems which deeply affect the public welfare. To solve them properly will require patient, careful, and intelligent consideration. The worst way to deal with them is by rash promises and appeals to passion and prejudice, with which the air is thick these days. "The sad thing is that many do not see through them at their real worth, and they therefore raise false hopes which are a menace to all real progress. You, at any rate, have conducted your campaign with unfailing seriousness and dignity and with a due regard to the responsibilities of the office which you hold. In doing so you have rendered great public service. I sincerely hope you will be re-elected by an imposing majority."

Chief among the other letters received are these:

EDWARD M. SHEPARD—You have my congratulations not only of so much upon your renomination as upon the personal triumph which the public sentiment of the metropolis, and, for that matter, of the whole country, signifies. To the formal registration of that triumph at the polls let me, please, bring any aid within my power.

JOHN BIGELOW—Like you I have faith in popular government. I believe that your record entitles you to the support of your constituents for re-election as Mayor. The question of your election obscures all personal quantities and reaches the security of our city and Nation.

Dr. W. S. BRYANT—I wish you success, and will do what I can to insure your re-election.

ADRIAN H. LARKIN—It is difficult for me to see how a person who is a believer in good government can waste his vote by not giving it to you. You have given us a firm, clean, vigorous, and successful administration. Further, it has been independent, and is appreciated by every one having the interests of the city at heart. If the voters would dismiss party feeling and other influences which would tend to draw them away from voting for the best man, your vote would be the most flattering one, in my judgment, that any candidate for the office of Mayor has received.

C. G. LA FARGE—I am an old Republican, but it is my intention, so far as my vote for Mayor goes, that it shall help to elect you. What you have done, and what you have tried to do, entitles you to a re-election.

JOHN C. CALHOUN—I believe your administration has been honest, upright, and creditable. I think it is the duty of every good citizen to give you warm and cordial support.

JOHN CLAFLIN—You have been a capable, intelligent, and conscientious Mayor, and you ought to be re-elected.

ALFRED C. CHAPIN, former Mayor of Brooklyn—Whether I influence more than one vote I doubt, but that one you will have, and if you get half the votes you deserve you will be elected.

CLEMENT MARCH—I came home from Europe for the sole purpose of registering and of getting all others whom I can influence to do the same, so that I might vote for your election.

HORATIO C. KING—It is my intention to vote for you and to persuade as many others as I can to do likewise.

FREDERIC R. COUDERT—I am glad to support you. My reasons are twofold. First, I like and respect you as a man; I think you have faithfully endeavored to live up to the best spirit of our Democratic institutions. In the second place, I believe our country must necessarily be governed by and through the medium of organized parties, possessing traditions and the confidence of the masses of people. It is no time to desert the standard of Democracy when the regular organization has put forward one of its best representatives for the office of Mayor.

ERSKINE HEWITT—Of your election I judge there is practically no question, and I congratulate you on this and on the general approval both by the public and the press which you have received as Mayor during your present term.

S. BARTON FRENCH—I returned from the Hot Springs for the purpose of casting my vote at the coming election, and promise not only to vote for you but to use what influence I can bring to bear in favor of your election, which I consider to be of great importance.

ERNEST T. CARTER—Two years ago I voted for Low and opposed your election, and although I still retain a prejudice of long standing against Tammany and against what are supposed to be Tammany's methods in politics, I am glad to say that your personal official record, together with your now almost universally conceded public spirit and sincerity of purpose, allows my political conscience to run in the same channel with my personal inclination.

FREDERICK H. ALLEN—Your record as Mayor has been so honest, clean, and efficient that it seems to me every good citizen should be glad to vote for your re-election.

WILLIAM L. ELDRIDGE—You are to be congratulated on the able, honest, and brave administration you have given us as Mayor.

EUGENE DELANO—While I did not vote for your first election, your course since you became Mayor has been such as to commend you to your fellow citizens.

PAUL D. CRAVATH—Although a Republican I have decided to vote for you for Mayor because of my confidence in you personally, and also because I think a vote for you is the most effective way to register one's opposition to Hearst and the dangerous principles which he is advocating.

CLEVELAND H. DODGE—I am heartily with you in your campaign, and what little influence I have is being exerted in your behalf.

R. T. H. HALSEY—I did not vote for your at the last election, and I did not believe it would be possible for you, surrounded as you were by organization ties, to be as good a Mayor as your opponent promised. However, I have been delighted with the administration that you gave the city, and have always intended to vote for you and influence any of my friends in the same direction. I was driven out of the Democratic Party by Bryanism and have been driven back into it by Odellism.

LLOYD S. BRYCE—You should be supported by all those who have the welfare of the city at heart, and to whom your great ability in the discharge of your office should appeal, particularly at this moment when so many wild and chaotic theories are being urged by one of the candidates.

J. FREDERIC KERNOCHAN—I am going to vote for you. Your conduct of the Mayor's office ought to make that a certainty with every independent man. In my case it will be the first time I have voted for any man on the Tammany ticket for many years, although I have wanted to vote Democratic always. In this case I am delighted to have a chance.

GEORGE P. CAMMANN—I have naturally followed your political career with great interest, and, whereas, I did not vote for you the first time you were nominated, this time I will gladly do so.

A. H. JOLINE—Whatever I can say or do to promote your election will be said and done, not only because you are the regular Democratic candidate, but because of the high appreciation I have of your personal character, and of your conduct as Mayor of New York.

HARPER'S BOOK NEWS.

The Debtor

Mary E. Wilkins Freeman, whose New England tales have touched the hearts of thousands of readers in a way that few books have, in this novel draws a hero of no common sort. His chequered career is appealingly portrayed. It is a searching study of character and also a well-told tale—told in the true Mary E. Wilkins style. There is here a love story of the most alluring type, while the unusual fortunes of "The Debtor" are sure to be followed with eager interest.

The Travelling Thirds

Gertrude Atherton has written no more captivating story than this. The Moultons resolve to include Spain in their European trip, even if they have to travel third class. The warm Spanish sunshine brings about a sort of love madness among them, and what would otherwise have been a sedate romance, flourishes in a most startling fashion. The climax is the most complete surprise of all. Altogether it is an unusually diverting story.

Gas Kills Two in a Boarding House.

Two men were suffocated by gas, yesterday, at 107 Van Nostrand Avenue, Jersey City, in a boarding house kept by Mrs. Mary Kenkelsaw. The gas is believed to have been turned on accidentally. The men came to the house three weeks ago. One said that he was Stephen Hennessy, and the other man gave his name simply as George.
